PREFACE.

To circumcised ears, TRUTH only is eloquence. To circumcised hearts, TRUTH only is a cordial: To the souls of Jehovah's elect, when regenerated, TRUTH only can make a jubilee. It is therefore the design of the author to exhibit in the subsequent pages the truth of the grace (or gospel) of our Lord Jesus Christ, according to the record thereof by St. John. The author loves every lover of that doctrine, and reveres every one who faithfully preaches it: Every such minister, is to him nearer than the apple of his eye: lovelier in his estimation than were Saul and Jonathan, on the mountains of Gilboa, to the son of Jesse. The author cannot say he is pleased, or even satisfied, with any feature of the work, excepting its theology: That theology is essentially that which is embraced in the "Articles of the Church of England"—"The Westminster Cutechism," and "Baptist Confession of Faith;"—and if it is not, essentially, the doctrine of God our Saviour, then,

'The pillar'd firmament is rottenness, And earth's foundation stubble!'

Whoever rests the visible church on earth upon the influence of this doctrine, is, a Minister, Missionary, Evangelist or Pastor after God's own heart, and in the genius of the gospel dispensation; and at the present time, may lay claim to the fortitude of an apostle. Whoever abandons this only legitimate means of raising up and exhibiting a visible church on earth, and resorts to other means, though never so politic, PROFITABLE, ingenuous, shewy or popular, they do but devise and maintain slander against Jehovah, and commit wrong and outrage upon the church of Christ. A system of theology that does not recognize the purposes of God is as intangible as the spirit of Saul—consuming to the soul as the Persian flame---as wild, lawless, and indefinable as the ravings of a maniac:-such a system is, Arminianism! She hands a charte blank to her disciples, and ministers, to be filled up with the language of their mere animal feelings--images of their unsanctified imaginations, and notions of their crude brains. While she is babbling away "to the unknown God," as did the prophets of Baal, and while she is stunning the ears of the community with her morning yells, or midnight croakings, it is the privilege and duty of those who know the certain sound, to shout it in the camp of Israel, "lest the brazen throat and adamantine lung'd" monster ultimately drown the voice of truth, or, otherwise, deafen the ears of the circumcised!

The author is an old fashioned theologian, in the Regular Baptist Church: (No Arminian!) notyet sufficiently scientific to believe, with the numerous tribe of modern Baptists, that the gospel is to be accommodated to the ever varying modifications of human society, or susceptible of the improvements of natural philosophy or political science! He is, by the grace of God, devoted to the faith and order of the regular Baptist church, in contradistinction to Fullerism, Arminianism and Socinianism; all of which sentiment he is equally opposed to, as being equally foreign to the cause of God and truth. To countervail those sentiments, this volume is published: at least that is the design of the author in publishing it, subordinate to affording the lover of truth the comfort of having his faith reciprocated. Such is the design; how far it may succeed the author does not expect to know in this world. The poem is the product of some solitary hours during a preaching tour. It is affectionately designed to be laid at the feet of the "Elect Lady" (if she has not become invisible) as a tribute of my devotion to her for her illustrious husband's sake. I owe her nothing .-- but HIM every thing! Should the offering prove acceptable, the author will, in that event, should life be spared him, find sufficient inducement to embody in the same form and dress, the great doctrine of sovereign grace as spread out and blazing in the sacred page, together with the inimitable, historical, and enchanting figurative illustration thereof which the divine volume affords.

The author would as soon eat living coals as to offer a philipick against an evangelical ministry: and he spurns the idea of insinuating that a liberal education, is not a happy and desirable acquisition to an evangelical minister. But for a mere man of letters to be a minister, is what he spurns: and that is what abounds in the church at the present day:—their light is delusion, and their presence stench: from them emanate a thousand errors and heresies where the unlearned broach one. It is the settled opinion of the author, made up after travelling about 20,000 miles in the ministry, and as many more out of it, that there is no more moral affinity between a vast majority of ministers of the present day, and the essential church of Christ, than there are emotions of maternity in the breast of an Egyptian mummy.

For the opinion of the world, or (which is pretty much the same thing) the Arminian, as to the theological character of the following poem, the author has no more anxiety than the man has, upon whose forehead the dew damps of death are glistening, whether the wind blows high or blows low. It is the church of Christ upon whom his solicitudes centre, and for whom he can say, (Labour ipse voluptas,) labour is a pleasure, and sacrifice gain. May it comfort the "chosen generation," and animate the breasts of some of the few evangelical ministers still left to the church on earth; and lift them above the hiss of the world, the wild declamation and croaking anathema of Arminianism, and the more formidable assault the devil may make upon their patience and fortitude through the timidity, unkindness, selfishness, carnal expediency and treachery of those who profess to be brethren in the one faith of God's elect! If such be in any degree the results, thine, O Shepherd and Bishop of souls! thine, be all the praise! Amen!

··› @ @ 944--

Jehovan's wrath to man, and how disarm'd, Tell, O my soul, by heavenly fire warm'd; Tell how thyself, in common with thy race, Had sunk in sin and Satan's dire embrace; How pleas'd in bondage, and how proud in shame, Thou trampled on Jehovah's holy name; Despis'd his laws, and thought his service hard, And all his terrors blasphemously dar'd. Tell how in councils of redeeming love Thus God design'd thy thraldom to remove. On summit of the everlasting hills, From whence the Son does what the God-head wills. There sat the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, While round their burning throne, the heavenly host Bow in a deeper awe—to see reveal'd New floods of glory—in which conceal'd The Deity commun'd-Man was the theme! What eye could pity, or what arm redeem? Then rose the Son! in splendours only known To eye omniscient.—Thus his words roll'd on. Eternal Father! first great cause of all Created good, on me let vengeance fall! Now, now, let heaven and earth and hell behold The fullest glories of thy grace unfold. Give up thy Son to unheard deeds of wrong: At me, be all the shafts of vengeance flung From thy stern hand of justice—let earth and hell Hunt and torment me while in flesh I dwell To heaviest sorrows, infamy, and death; I'll man redeem with my expiring breath!

Great Son of the Eternal! spake the Sire, Vast is thy glory—this shall raise it higher-O'er all recorded, shall it endless shine In our deep volume, glory's brightest line. And now our Spirit shall descend to earth, And form a body for thy mortal birth: A virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, Thro' whom our mighty conquest shall be won, The Father's justice, and Jehovah's love, Shall make the highest, sweetest note above! And now the Spirit leaves the high abode, In heaven's majestic quietude it rode On gentlest zephyrs, to the virgin bless'd, And in omnipotence her womb possessed With "form of man"—while she exultant cried, "Henceforth of women I shall be the pride." At the full time the Holy Ghost declar'd, The body of the wondrous babe prepar'd: When all amazement, angels caught the sound, And circling Gabriel, ask with awe profound The import of those words—he silent bent His pregnant glance toward the throne—intent To learn if he might fill the listening ears Of angel hosts, with what himself reveres. The smile of God, ineffable and sweet, Beam'd all around—while rising from his seat He spoke in answer to the angel's eye, And thus, in words of fire, gave a reply. No-Gabriel, no-distinguish'd as thou art, The theme 's too vast for other to impart Than my own lips. And now, ye heavenly throng, Hear what shall raise your everlasting song, To all the fulness that your powers can bear, In all my joys, of which I will you share. My "Equal" and my everlasting Son, In whom, well pleas'd, I view all I have done, By whom I made the worlds, above—below, Angels and men: and rebels overthrow; In whom, Elect, your seat in bliss is sure, And whom adoring, more you would adore:

That Son has rose in all his matchless love, And in the form of sinful man, will prove His power to save as well as to destroy! This be your theme of highest, endless joy.

So spake the Sire—a moment angels gaze On their great head, and then in new-found praise Strike all their lyres—while from their tongues arise Shouts of salvation, rending all the skies. With big emotion now they hear the word To stand prepar'd, to bear their glorious Lord To the frail tenement of mortal clay, Now ripe to usher to the light of day. Throng upon throng of radiant seraphs move, And Cherubs, flying on the wings of love, Precede the advent of the King of kings, While each exultant, rivals what each sings. Then came The Ancient of Eternal Days! Around him spread insufferable blaze: The clouds his chariot—his coursers were the winds, His throne behind—before a world's dire sins, Onward he rode, while gathering hosts surround, Of noblest spirits, fill'd with awe profound To see the heavens bow, and God descend! Transgression finish, and of sin make end. Thro' space unmeasur'd thus the concourse mov'd, While heaven's broad arch in burning splendours glow'd,

Till watchful, now they catch a glimpse of earth, Their glories shroud, and check their holy mirth. The mighty Son by power original, Cloth'd his fierce flames in an impervious vail, In hidden darkness from angel sight withdrew, And to his earthly house Jehovah flew, In virgin womb—which felt the power divine, Nor longer could the holy thing confine Within its cell-but travailing, bore its charge To life's wild waves—salvation's only barge! The radiant angels now o'er Judea flame: On watchful shepherds' wond'ring vision came The host celestial. - While from their tuneful lips, Bursts the loud song, and thus their theme depicts. Fear not, ye highly favour'd of the Lord, To you is born this day the Eternal Word; The Saviour promis'd-Israel's glorious hope, Of whom the prophets and the patriarchs spoke; And this shall be the sign, in Bethlehem lays, This object of our past and future praise; In infant form—a manger is his bed—

Where cattle feed, he rests his holy head. In swaddling clothes is wrapt, that awful form Which rides the whirlwind, and directs the storm. In infant helplessness that power is found, By which all worlds in adamant are bound. Illustrious scene! be highest glory given To David's God, by all in earth and heaven; Henceforth be peace and good-will to the earth— All nature shout—Immanuel's wondrous birth Wrapt in amaze! and overwhelm'd with joy, 'The shepherds' muse—their labouring thoughts employ, On what their ears had heard, their eyes had seen, Their souls had felt, of Deity within, While angels spoke. - Let us rise and go, they cry, And see this long desired mystery Now come to pass .- All other things give place, To seeking him who's full of truth and grace. Let wolves devour our flocks, let ruin come On earthly things—all, all's but dross and dung Compar'd with finding him the promis'd seed, And thro' him, resurrection from the dead! With rapid steps they hasten'd then away And found the cradle where Immanuel lay; Saw-felt-rejoic'd in him their Lord and God-Returning, spread his wondrous name abroad. To Jewish ritual Christ was duly given, And Jesus nam'd, by seal of circumcision: So call'd, in harmony with God's decree, That he, his people from their sins should free! This rite scarce finish'd, when old Simeon came Into the temple, glowing with a flame Of inspiration high! he fondly gaz'd On the strange child; and then exultant rais'd His lovely form within his wither'd arms, And feasted on his thousand nameless charms; Till his full soul no longer could contain Its joys immense; or his glad tongue refrain From breaking forth in song of sweetest strain. O Lord, he cried, let thy blest servant now Depart in peace, according to thy vow; For I have waited till mine eyes have seen Thy great salvation shew'd before all men; A light to lighten Gentiles to the skies, And Israel's glory thro' all centuries.

That great salvation now begins to grow; Thro' every nation shall its waters flow, Till wash'd and ransom'd all the heirs of grace In highest heaven shall consummate the blaze Of thy revealed glory and thy praise. Thus Simeon sung; by Anna was the theme Prolong'd, in joys celestially serene; 'Till all around were fill'd with sacred awe, And all the footsteps of Jehovah saw. In grace and wisdom, Jesus rose thro' youth, Yet green in years, he taught the wisest truth: Burning with zeal his Father's will to do, From all on earth his thoughts and heart withdrew. Now thirty years had Jesus been inured To mortal scenes, in sphere of life obscur'd-When God within him led him to the flood Of sacred Jordan; where the Baptist stood Immersing sinners! Buried in the wave Was great Immanuel: (type of his own grave!) When rising from the watery tomb there came The Holy Ghost, in dove-like form of flame! And rested on his head; while lo! the Father's voice Proclaim'd him Son of his eternal choice. In whom his soul delighted as a Sire, Whom he had honour'd, and would honour higher, And thro' the power and glorious name of whom, His sov'reign pleasure had, and ever should be done! Thus scarce express'd was the great Father's love, 'Till power divine the holy Jesus drove From man's abode, to gloomy deserts—where Prepar'd in dread array, the Prince of air, Of darkness, death and hell, in ambush lay, All fierce to make the Son of God his prey, And close in endless night, salvation's dawning day! The desert reach'd, the Saviour, musing, said, Here, then, once more, I make the earth my bed, And wait submissive to my Father's will, With all the purposes he may reveal In this wild waste. Some awful hour draws nigh, Some mighty deed my soul is near to try; For all her powers are stirring in a strength, That makes her kindred to omnipotence. To do or suffer, as high heaven ordains, Is all my joy—the end of all my pains.

While musing thus, the Son of God descries A hoary form in solemn reveries, 'Neath neighb'ring shade: to whom, when near, he said, Hail man of solitude! thou seem'st like one that 's dead To mortal sense of sublunary things, And all thy thoughts pois'd on celestial wings. The stranger rais'd his silver head and sigh'd, And thus to Jesus meekly he replied. Alas! young man, 'tis time now to withdraw My thoughts, from all my waning eyes e'er saw In this vain world. Its image is a curse, Nor can imagination paint it worse-Unless on recent day, to serve a friend, A full score years, my feet did ne'er ascend From this rude scene, and deep perpetual gloom, Or my thoughts fix on aught but worlds to come. Alone I've liv'd-nor e'er had thought to see In this wild waste, a fellow man with me; Nor can I yet devise, what cause could move, One full of life as thou, here to remove Thy form attractive. But I check the tongue Of talking age—it suits not with the young, To listen to their verbiage. I wait to hear If thou in court'sy may the same declare, What cause hath urg'd thee hither to repair. To whom the Son replied. We live and move In God, the cause of all below and all above; Our habitation is by him ordain'd; Our lives therein by him alone sustain'd. Where you retir'd to gain your grey hairs rest, God may have led me, here more full to bless; Or this, or not, his righteous will be done, His name extelled, and his bright kingdom come. Brief is thy answer, now the sage replied, If not most courteous, with piety supplied. And now methinks, some doctrine of that kind, I recent heard from mouth of clownish hind In Judea's plains. Loud did his voice proclaim, That the Most High had come on earth—and came To seek and save the fallen race of man, By some great, deep, and heaven-contrived plan. In sooth, he put aside so far great REASON'S rules, That none will heed him but some rustic fools. And yet with all his mass of nonsense he had some

Twere well, said Jesus, if you could afford
A standard for the fool or wise man's word;
Did human thoughts of largest compass stand
A text book for the rest, then all were damn'd;
Damn'd in the tumult of their steadiest views,
And wretchedness the fruit of their best truths.

To whom the sagar replied. I see that man you've

To whom the sage replied. I see that man you've scann'd,

And know the sandy base on which they stand. When most they feel secure. But fair youth, Tho' finite man may not know what is truth, Reason alone will prove his guarantee, From views disgraceful to the Deity; Nor suffer him to think, the Lord of all, Who spread the heavens and form d this earthly ball With all their glories, e'er bestows a thought On pigmy man-if righteous, or if not; Much less admit the Infinite unknown, From all his peerless glory would come down To this dark world—as mortal culprit die— Convuls'd with pangs and cloth'd with infamy. Who thus conceive, the lowest reason boast, And of blasphemers, guilty are the most. But should some mortal vainly think, that he Was thus possess'd with the great Deity, The scorn of wise men, and a life of shame, Would well secure imperishable fame, As chief of maniacs, or of hardiest knaves, And round his name for ever there would blaze, Tophet's dire, lurid halo of disgrace. But e'en suppose this wondrous being form'd, And now on earth with heavenly light adorn'd; What sort of message would he have to give? What sort of welcome would he here receive? His message holy, men would frowning spurn; His claims divine, their hearts with rage would burn; One universal cry against him rise, And all denounce him as the Prince of lies: Nor marvel here—for from this Holy One Such loveliness and glory must be shown, That men must see (and seeing hate the light,) The deep and all pervading moral night

In which they grop'd—Fierce would their passion rise For then as in a mirror burnish'd in the skies,
They'd see themselves made up of moral infamies.
Pride, vanity, self-love, would call for blood,
And man assail his maker and his God!
Pride, vanity, self-love, and lust would cry;
"Quench, quench the light! tho' God himself should die!"

Thus artful, did the long-disguised foe
Of God and man, in sceptick converse go
With the bless'd Jesus. Changing his wily arts,
And every hour he flung his poison'd darts
In subtle words: now vent'ring to suggest,
That if a God some mortal form possess'd,
No heath, no desert would be his abode;
No thorny path of grief, or rugged road,
Would he e'er tread. But that for him would rise
The gorgeous palace, tow'ring to the skies;
That tables spread with all earth, sea, or air
Could yield, delicious, or make matchless rare,
Would be his portion, and his pomp declare.
That thousand vassals would his steps attend,
And his, all earthly glory, would transcend.

Thus talk'd the tempter, while Immanuel's bed, Was where e'en foxes would not rest their head; While torn with hunger and with thirst inflam'd, And every nerve with burning fever pain'd. His foe, unwearied, tauntingly advis'd, By miracle to have his wants suppli'd With food convenient—and to quench his thirst By bidding water from the rock to burst. If thou, said he, indeed, be God's own Son, Then feed thyself by making bread of stone; Thy life draws nigh to the devouring grave for want of food; nor is their aught to save Thee from consuming famine, but the power That vindicates the God-head of the doer.

Tis written, said the Son, that man shall live, Not by bread only, but he shall receive In every word of God defence from ill, Attendant on the doing of his will.

Why I am here without a place to rest,
By gloom, by satan, and by want oppress'd,

Is not for me to tell, or you to know-Who cast my lot will bear me safely through. And dost thou seek a token of my power! Hast thou forgotten then, that fearful hour, When rushing on thee and thy rebel throng, I pour'd the thunders of my voice along, That shook the heavens, crush'd your mighty throne, And sunk you to your present awful doom! And soon the hour shall come, when I will make Not only heaven, but earth and hell to shake! When this right hand shall excavate thy cell Ten thousand times more deep, in thine own hell; When mountain waves, of blazing fire shall roll In tempest-fury o'er thy impious soul, When every breath of my eternal ire, Shall fiercer kindle the devouring fire; And, as in crime, shall thy condition be, First in hell's pains thro' all eternity.

Unmov'd, the tempter heard the Saviour's words, And, REASONING HIGH, conceives of what affords Fresh ground to doubt the being of a God

In him, before whom now he hostile stood. Thus settled in his views, he once more plies. The ear of Jesus with his specious lies.

Tells of his power, his kingdoms and control

Throughout the earth, wide spread from pole to pole.

Bears Jesus to a lofty mountain's height, And brings the whole to his attentive sight: Describes their origin, their growth, their kings, And movement of their deep politic springs; And how, by his long-tried and potent skill, All could be moulded to the sovereign will

Of one whom he might honour with the rule, And raise the matchless monarch of the whole.

All this, said Satan, will I give to thee,

If thou wilt "bow thyself," own, serve, and worship me:

One splendid empire, shall this world become, And all its glories be secur'd thy own! Choose then, while choice is left thee, nor forget The sad reverse of glory, that must wait Contempt of my fair offer—then, I'll turn All power in hell and earth, to do thee harm. Hunt and torment thee, thro' each path of life,

And curse thee in the bitterest of strife That creature ever knew—Thy name shall rot— Thy friends betray-thy foes shall make thee sport, Till all that's vile and horrible shall roll, In whelming floods upon your sinking soul! "Behind me get thee, Satan," said the Lord, For thus 'tis written—"thou shalt worship God." And canst thou think, if thou hadst worlds to give, That at thy hand, the whole I would receive; Or ever act a part in thy base train, And own thy with ring, blasting, damning reign? What are the nations and the pomp of power, Of which thou hast shewn so much, and now talk o'er? Some master spirits by thine own design, Have founded kingdoms—and support their reign In all that's lawless, cruel and accurs'd, And made, throughout the earth, a flood of mis'ry burst. Kings-heroes-nobles-lords, (of thine) have been, And will be, blasting monuments of sin, Throughout the world; till he, whose right to reign It is—shall come and burst their heavy chain; Restore the human race their equal right, And put thy principalities to flight. Such value give I to thy proffer'd boon; Nor in thy insolence again presume To tempt me more, with what vain mortals prize, Made great by lust, and gilded with thy lies. For thy bold threats, fulfil them as you may, Thy victim I may fall—but ne'er your prey. "Tis mine to suffer here—Eternity's to show The boundless glories that shall ceaseless grow From love of God, and rage of thee his foe. Satan, aghast, heard thus the Saviour speak, And from his visage saw a glory break, That fill'd him with dismay, lest this fair form Contain'd the power, destin'd to raise the storm Of his damnation, to its utmost height, And sink him to interminable night! In madining throes the fiend began to writhe, And rage and terror for the mast'ry strive; While all that's hideous, hateful and abhorr'd, Rose in his face and stamp'd him hell's own lord. Till furious render'd by the storm within, He seiz'd, and bore upon his rapid wing,

The passive Jesus, to the temple's height, And thus, in foaming spasms express'd his spite, Here—thou would be God, here rest thy wearied limbs. While gently fann'd by heaven's obedient winds, No doubt thou'lt find repose, exalted thus, And own my kindness lib'ral for thy curse: And when refresh'd with sleep, cast thyself down, For it is written—heaven shall thy person own, And keep thy feet from every hurtful stone. To whom, the Saviour calmly thus replied-Thou fiend detested, first in power and pride, Thus far thou'st gone in insolent control O'er this frail tenement—thus vex'd my soul. With thy foul words—and dar'd profanely quote The sacred truths, the lips of God have spoke Of his great Son: here breaks thy awful power, Thy kingdom totters from this very hour, And shall dissolve, till the whole world be free From thy control--and own no Lord but me! In human form, I have thy arts all foil'd-In that same form thy kingdom shall be spoil'd--More, it behaves me not, to thee to tell; A world eternal shall the rest reveal To thy confusion, and all heaven's amaze, To my high glory, and thine own disgrace. Now go, thou cursed, to thy dark abode, For thou shall never tempt the Lord thy God! In sullen silence, Satan then withdrew.

Abash'd—defeated, to his hellish crew;
With them to counsel, and with them to plan
More deadly warfare 'gainst the son of Man.
Now angels, ministrant on Christ attend,
And with him once more to the earth descend;
They hymn his praise, and feed his fainting soul
With bread from heaven; while from the flowing bowl
Of Deity's own comforts, large he quaff'd,
And rose restored from all his sorrows pass'd.
Thus cheer'd and strengthen'd, Christ return'd again

To Judea's cities, and the haunts of men.

THE MIRACLES

AND

DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.*

In miracle and doctrine now he moved, In bold relief, and grandeur of a God! And first—at "Caana's feast, by power divine, He gave to water, the gen'rous warmth of wine; See! cried they, while in red'ning tide it gush'd, The bashful stream hath seen its God—and blush'd." A breath from Jesus wings its instant course To miles around, and there, with heavenly force, O'ercomes disease—with health fills ev'ry vein, And pleasure's throb succeeds to that of pain. The shrivell'd form of ghastly atrophy, Is cloth'd with flesh, and swells with youthful glee; The impotent are nerv'd with manhood's strength— The limb contracted, gains its equal length. The blind behold the golden flood of day, And bound in wonder and in ecstacy: The floating atmosphere is turn'd to bread, And thereon, marvellously, are thousands fed. Now sailing o'er the deep and raging sea Toward Capernaum, Christ's disciples see Their master, walking on the foaming wave-The billows own their maker, and his feet they lave-In glist'ning spray, now swiftly rolling on In liquid softness, yet with strength of stone. To bear their God, in flesh, to the frail bark In which his followers sail'd, and trembling mark'd The roaring tempest and the mountain surge, Which hung terrific o'er their groaning barge. The vessel gain'd, new impulse now was given To winds and waves—by which, obedient driven, The master and his servants reach their haven. Again, the Saviour rides the mighty deep— Heaven wrapp'd in whirlwind, and himself in sleep; Aghast his followers stand, or wildly cry, Master awake! behold that awful sky!

^{*} This account of the ministry of Christ, is from the gospel by John.

How dire its darkness—how its thunders roll! And see its lightnings blaze from pole to pole! See how our vessel reels! O Master save--Behold that yawning sea, that mountain wave, It falls—we sink—the ocean is our grave! Jesus, majestically serene, arose; And from his lips, the mighty mandate goes To warring elements--peace-be still, he said, And all was hush'd as slumbers of the dead. At his small voice, heaven's darkness roll'd away, The deep voracious gave him up its prey, And the sky kindled into sudden day; The winds retire to their unknown abode, And oceans billows, prostrate own their God! O'er grave of Lazarus, the mighty Son In human sympathy, and sorrow hung; While in the same omnific word, he said, To him, now mould'ring with the sleeping dead, *Lazarus, come forth, from out thy loathsome grave; And prove my arm omnipotent to save! Obedient to the word, behold him come! While friends and kindred all, delighted run To greet him welcome to their arms again, And their glad tongues the name of Christ proclaim. These miracles perform'd, and thousands more, Rous'd men to hear, to wonder and adore The glorious author.—Eternal Spirit, tell The doctrine utter'd by Immanuel! And first—a Rabbi struck with sacred awe, At what his ears now heard, his eyes now saw Of the Messiah—'neath covert of the night, Sought his abode, to feast his longing sight With his bright form—and have his list'ning ears Fill'd with the mission, which the Saviour bears. In terms of adulation, he salutes The lowly Jesus, and therefrom computes The object of his homage, would observe Much deference to himself, and truths reserve Of harsh and vulgar import; or dispense His words selected and of polish'd sense. (Thus, vain man still, in little learning dress'd,

Or rais'd in power, somewhat o'er the rest; Conceives e'en God should always speak to him,

In soften'd language of a hell and sin; Tis this, that prompts the liberal support Of Teachers, who their very words assort To please the ear, to fan the innate pride Of fiends incarnate, who the truth deride. They talk of human dignity and moral worth, As superceding the celestial birth, And call, alike the pious and profane, Dear brethren—lovers of the Saviour's name;— Be not offended, if we dare once tell, That somewhere, it is written, there's a hell!) The Ruler's Rabbi, and his words polite, Pass'd with Immanuel for their just weight Of worth-for nothing. - Listen to Christ's reply; Hear, feel, and understand, or doubly die!! Thou learned Rabbi, mark what I proclaim— You and your race, must all be born again! Born in free grace, and by the Spirit's power, And made to own the God-head of the doer; Or this not done, and man shall never know, The nature of my kingdom here below; Or this not done, he ne'er can rise to see, That Kingdom's glory in eternity. The Ruler, startled and amaz'd, exclaim'd, How can this be,—or how at all explain'd? Can a man enter in his mother's womb

A second time? such doctrine, I presume, Is not impli'd—for never yet has been An instance of it heard, or read, or seen Among the human race. Then Rabbi, say, What is its character, its mode and way. That, said Immanuel, which of flesh is born, Is flesh in every inner fold and form, As well as outward. What is flesh, you cry-Let God's unerring word give the reply. Each thought is evil—evil is their heart— Each acts the Demon, e'en when most approv'd his part: In sin conceiv'd, in sin he lives and moves, Hates God-hell serves-and all uncleanness loves. Proud is his heart—his mind is cloth'd with lies, He lives a Demi-god—a devil, dies! Such portrait, by the high command of heaven, Has the unerring Spirit of Jehovah given. Of human kind; vain mortals shrink from this

Self knowledge-ignorance here is bliss. The renovation which I now proclaim, Is to restore this fallen wretch again To holiness—so that heaven may become His glorious dwelling place, and final home! No power created, can the work perform, And thus, to holiness the soul transform, But th' Eternal Spirit—and that comes To whom he lists—to all the chosen ones! As blows the wind, so does that Spirit move On every soul, that the Creator's love:* Not more resistless, is the tempest storm, By which the loftiest forests are uptorn; Not more beyond created fiat or control Do ocean's billows rage, or gently roll From their deep centre, to the distant pole. Again, the Rabbi marvels—and again he cries, Can these things be—so hidden from my eyes! Must human reason thus submissive bend, Believe, what it can never comprehend? To whom the Saviour—In nature many things In mystery operate; in mystery, springs The wind that prostrates, or that gently spreads Its balmy undulations o'er our heads; 'Tis heard by all, by all its power is felt— From whence it comes, or where it hidden dwelt, Or whither goes-is knowledge never dealt To creature mind. Jehovah thus ordains, Or where the Spirit moves, or where triumphant reigns, Be wise, and from effects, judge ye the cause— Such only is the base of reason's laws: O shame for Israel! when thou, a master's place. Holdest among her dark degenerate race; Untutor'd thou, in first, plain, simple rules Of my salvation, taught in Prophets' schools A thousand years—a perfect fool I find— Blind leader of the feeble, perishing blind! Thyself, a sample of a host to come In after times; who, thro' the earth shall run As sent of God, and moved from above, When gold is their God, and only self they love. I say to you, we speak what we well know, And testify to what we've seen below, [·] Zeber ath Buriak.

Of this great work; if this be not believ'd. How will the heav'nly vision be receiv'd? Beyond the grave, no mortal eye hath seen-To bring to light Eternity's dread scene: What this world is, and has been since the fall, A few brief years will give a gust to all! I only know, what's in the world to come— And I alone, can tell what 's the doom Of sinful man—Then by myself I swear, He that's not born again, shall perish there! Sin, like the poison, which the Hebrews felt, (When in the wilderness, of old they dwelt,) From fiery serpents, diseases every part, And pours its deadly influence thro' the heart. And as the remedy to Israel given, Was by the sov'REIGN will and power of heaven, So, when the sinner 's cur'd, the power's the same-The antidote is 'looking to the Lamb,' Slain from the earth's foundation; look and live, Is the great lesson I have come to give To fallen man—who learns its import well, Is saved from sin and everlasting hell. God so loved man, as to give up his Son, That in man's form, due honours might be done To his dishonour'd law. In Adam, all transgress-I am the Lord—their perfect righteousness. I am deliver'd for the sins of men, To we and death, that they may live again. Whoe'er believes, and feels these doctrines true, Is born again—or Gentile, or the Jew! Light has come into this benighted world— That light, is God's most holy law reveal'd In Moses' precepts, and my pattern bright: But men avoid, and hate the holy light, And rather choose a state of moral night.*

^{* (}John iii. 18 to 21.) In this passage of scripture, Jesus evidently means his own light as a moral example! Not his light as a the sun of righteousness? to Zion! It was his moral example and precept, the world hated and hates—shrunk, and still shrinks from—and this, their hatred, of his example and precept, and turning their backs upon him, as that moral light, proved they were depraved and condemned already. Jesus refers to their conduct towards himself, to shew their fallen nature and condemnation.—He then declares, that whosoever believeth in him is not thereafter condemned but justified freely from all things, and this manifestatively to his

If they would come to Sinai's holy law,

There they would see themselves—as yet they never saw.—

A mirror, burnish'd by the hand of heav'n, Would that law prove; in which their sins engraven, Would so alarm them, that no peace of mind, Nor gleam of heaven-ward hope, could they e'er find. Whoe'er desires to do God's righteous will, Comes to this law, which all his sins reveal— His sins reveal'd, abhorring self, he flies To me the righteous—then he never dies; That law 's the judge of all the human race, And with that law, my gospel I preface: Till THAT is felt, extending to each thought, This is neglected, spurn'd, and set at nought, What God has join'd together, none may part-The attempt proclaims a dark and impious heart. Man's device makes a thousand standards more, To judge of man-till blinded o'er and o'er, Each, by another, measures his proud self, And when he 's bankrupt, boasts of moral wealth. Samaria's border now the Christ receives— He went obedient to high heaven's decrees. People he had, among that hated tribe, For whom he suffer'd,—and for whom he died. A woman loose, and profligate he met At Jacob's well—where wearied, he was set; To whom he spoke of the celestial springs, Whose living water, full salvation brings To vilest souls, and cleanses from all sins.

own soul! on the contrary, whosover believeth not, remains in nature's depravity and condemnation to the law! This is the scope, sum and substance of Jesus Christ's meaning in this passage of scripture. And this harmonises exactly with the matter of fact experience of the church and the world, and the tenor of divine revelation.—Nothing but the spirit of Arminianism would ever breathe a different interpretation of the passage.

The difference between Fullerism and Arminianism, appears to be this—The latter says, God will send no man to hell without giving him a chance to secure for himself an interest in the salvation of Israel! The former says, that men are condemned because they reject the gospel; and that in fact there was no condemnation until they had so rejected it. If this be true, thrice happy would it have been for man that the gospel had never been promulged; for nine out of ten that hear it, reject it: and what is the everlasting happiness of one compared with the everlasting misery of nine!

The woman marvell'd, and desir'd to know, Where such choice waters might be found to flow; That as he saw her, now herself she felt, Conceiv'd in sin, and laden'd deep with guilt; Relief she ask'd from the dread power of sin, And wept and groan'd to have her soul made clean; Besought Immanuel to inform her mind, Where she the presence of her God might find; That to Jerusalem, Samaritans could not go-And only there, 'twas said, God dwelt below. The Saviour answer'd-list! the time is nigh, When souls regenerate, one and all shall fly, Into my name; and there their God adore, Their superstitions, and vain forms give o'er. God, is a Spirit diffus'd throughout all space-No form describes him, and no time or place Controls his presence—equally he dwells In highest heaven, and earth's unfathom'd cells. Who feel the unction of devotion burn In their new hearts, are ever prompt to learn The precious truth; the water I will give To those who thirst, shall in their spirits live A springing well, eternal as my throne— And all the glory be secur'd my own! The woman heard, and flew away to tell Her friends and kindred, of Immanuel. Come, come, she cries, to Jacob's well, and sec Some glorious One, resembling Deity!-He told me all my thoughts, my heart and life, And how to five, I've been a faithless wife; Must this not be the long-foretold Messiah? Lost Israel's hope, and the whole world's desire! Of whom 'tis written—I will Jacob show All his transgressions—Israel too, shall know

As that repentance, which alone ne'er dies.
Meanwhile, Disciples their great Master greet
With proffer'd food, and urge him much to eat.
I've meat, said Jesus, that ye know not of—
'Tis to perform the will of God above,
And finish his great work of saving love.
'The day is coming when you too, shall feel

How high the Spirit mounts, that has his will For its great pole-star; and how much endure, That heav'n-born soul, that does its God adore! With what solicitude do men compute 'The varied seasons, till the earth yields fruit: E'en you exclaim, within a few months more, Again we'll reap our ample annual store Of golden grain; again our vallies ring, With songs of those who shout the harvest hymn. If joys thus high, expand the human breast, When with their earthly bread, each season 's bless'd, How vast my joy, when I shall gather in, Those sheaves of grace I've saved from hell and sin! How full my glory, when I shall make good, That harvest sown and nurtur'd in my blood! This joy is set before me; and for it I brave Unfathom'd woes, and taste death's bitterest wave. O look, my friends! the ripening harvest's come, When my elect shall gather to their home; Already are their whit'ning heads bow'd down In penitence, which God himself shall own As unto life, through his exalted Son! Pray ye the Lord, that lab'rers may increase, And reap in righteousness the sheaves of grace; Until the time come, when you all shall meet In my great garner, as the chosen wheat: When joys of him who sow, and they who reap, Shall be eternal, and exceeding great. While thus the Saviour his disciples taught, The woman had a thousand neighbours brought To Jacob's well—these, too, his words attend, And hail him Christ, the sinner's only friend! This doctrine taught, and works of mercy done, The Jews in wrath now charge upon the Son, A breach of Moses' law—because, said they, Thou'st done these things upon the Sabbath day. To whom, Immanuel thus an answer gave— I know the law which you from Moses have— From heaven it came.—I am the mighty Lord Of e'en the Sabbath day, ordain'd of God. Who gave the law, he only, can annul: The Lord of th' Sabbath, is the God of all! These truths displease you, fill your hearts with rage, And urge you now most impious to engage In bloodiest deed against my sinless life; And henceforth to maintain the fiercest strife Against my person—doctrine—and my cause, And make your own blind passions all your laws: But I'm the same—eternally the same— I work as God—Immanuel is my name; I raise the dead—I quicken whom I will—I lift to heaven—I sink to lowest hell! I judge the world—the mighty universe! My smile is bliss; my frown the heaviest curse: Who honours not the Son as the great Sire, May say he worships, but he is a liar. Who hear my words, and thus believe on me, They shall be bless'd thro' vast eternity. The hour is coming, and is now at hand, When those who 're dead shall hear my great command Say to them, sleeping in sin's awful grave, "Awake—come forth," it is my will to save Your souls from sin-obedient they shall live, And thro' all ages, shall due honour give To their Redeemer's name—which honours shall be full When o'er creation my loud voice shall roll, To wake each atom of the mortal dead, From the long slumber of their dreamless bed. Thus I will speak: all flesh shall then appear Before my throne, their final doom to hear. The good to life and endless joys shall rise, The wicked to taste the death that never dies! I can in my mere manhood, nothing do Of all you've seen, or all I've promis'd you I will perform; yet is my judgment just Or of myself, or you, from last to first. My works and Father, testify of me-He owns me Son—they speak my Deity! Search ye the scriptures, for in them ye say, Ye have eternal life—and they are they That testify of Christ. THEY thus proclaim, The countless honours of his matchless name, JEHOVAH call'd! of whom all Israel boasts: The God of Jacob, and the Lord of Hosts!! The First and Last in heaven's unceasing praise, The Angient of interminable days: A God most true—most great—God over all: Before whom, heaven bows and devils fall!

Of his ETERNITY, those scriptures tell, And loud proclaim him the Immutable: Whose presence fills the boundless universe-Whose eye Omniscient, does all space traverse; While his Omnipotence, their pages prove, And deep engrave his name . The God of Love! To him, those scriptures every work assign-Or what eternity unfolds, or what in time, By him, all are upheld. on him depend: He their beginning, and their final end. Of him, the holy oracles have said, The woman's seed shall bruise the serpent's head; While Moses cries, his bosom fill'd with praise, A prophet shall the Lord to Israel raise, Like unto me—him shall the people hear, And Jew and Gentile each, his name revere. Old Jacob wrestled with him thro' the night— The man! the God! nor e'er forgot the sight; But dying look'd thro' ages yet to come, And thus predicts the advent of the Son. Hear ye my sons! now tottering o'er the grave, I bow myself to taste death's icy wave; Ere I depart, I claim your solemn thought, Of the bright vision to my spirit brought. That angel who, hath saved myself and you, And led me all life's fitful journey thro', His inspiration all my powers feel, Appears! And thus, triumphant, I his truth reveal. From Judah's hands, the sceptre shall not go Till he appear from heaven, to man below: To him, the gath'ring nations all shall come— The world's vast empire own his sway alone. O glorious day, when that bless'd angel reigns. The end of human crimes and mortal pains! Thus Israel spake—heav'n beaming in his face, And fell, exultant, in death's cold embrace. Now holy Job, beholds his day afar, Gleaming thro' clouds, like the bright morning star; To heaven he lifts his hands and tear-dimm'd eyes, With sacred rapture—then the patriarch cries, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and shall stand At the last day on earth—and give command To the pale inmates of the narrow tomb,

To lift their heads, and to his presence come. Then joyful, to corruption may I say, Thou art my Father—hasten thou this way— And to the grave, O mother, let my head Repose within thee as my downy bed. My mothers and my sisters, clay-clod worms, O how I long to have your sinewy forms, Wanton and sport within this curious cell, In which my soul's confin'd, and there to dwell Battening on this now fainting, tortur'd flesh, And at life's fountain moisten'd and refresh'd. All this I hail as my soul's final good; For thus in flesh refin'd, I'll see my God:* And him, whose mem'ry the bless'd psalms embalm, Whom Zion gives as minstrel, bay and palm, He by the Spirit, says of Christ to come, ·My Lord and God! my long-desir'd Son! Thy foes shall fall—Jehovah's is thy throne; Thou wilt not leave me to the grave or sin-Thou'lt raise my body, make my soul all clean. Thee I shall worship in thy courts above, And swell the anthem of redeeming love. Isaiah now, the prince of prophets, cries, Behold, descending from the lofty skies, The Holy One of God! to us he 's given, A child! a Son! the God of earth and heaven! The government shall on his shoulders rest: And therein Israel be forever blest. His name, (incarnate) shall be "Wonderful-The Mighty God," who filleth all in all! The Everlasting sire of Israel's race, The warrior roll'd in blood-"The Prince of Peace." For me the scriptures prophesy-for me run blood-And bring to view, all that is great and good

The denial of the resurrection of the body, by a numerous denomination of professed christians, furnishes out one impressive evidence that man, in nature under the delusion and influence of the Devil, will disbelieve every truth of the Bible—Indeed it is worthy of notice again and again—that the Devil has at last, raised up about as many denominations of professors, as is necessary to enable him to have a separate and distinct instrument, for assailing every important truth in the Doctrine of the Gospel!! And then he comes forward with a proposition to exercise charity for one, and for all! i. e. Believe all to be in the truth, tho' all-together, deny and denounce all the truths of the gospel!!

In human life; as a faint type of me, So glorious they—what must the substance be! Such testimony do, your prophets give-And yet I know, you never will believe: How can you-when earth's honours are your God-Nor own my righteousness, nor want my blood! Your Rabbies teach, to be far-famed for love-God's wisdom they exclude—their own adore; Your Rabbies rule—God's providence exclude, That men may laud them, for their country's good; Your Priests burn incense, with unhallow'd fire-Exalt Jehovah—but themselves still higher, But all is done in the Eternal's name, And heaven 's made pander, thus to spread their fame. The world's epitome! from north to south, From east to west, such is its moral growth, Rabbies and heroes, scribes and priests and kings-Their virtue from pride and vanity, all springs; While each, obsequious to the other bows, Flatters—is flatter'd—nor higher motive knows. And now to Gallilee, the Saviour moves, Follow'd by those who love, and whom he loves: And here, mirac'lous he five thousand fed, From two small fishes, and five loaves of bread; They with one voice, when their strange feast was done, Declare him in truth, the prophet that should come; Make heaven and earth with his loud praises ring—Offer to make and claim him for their king.

To whom the Saviour, thus himself declar'd—I see you now, are one and all prepar'd

To follow me—the object too I know,
For which, so zealous after me ye go.

The loaves are in your eyes—these move your feet;
The bread of idleness, you find is sweet.

My awful power none of your spirits moves,
You're all engross'd with the mirac'lous loaves.
You are the first fruits of a numerous tribe,
Whom loaves and fishes shall inspire and guide,
As my disciples, in an outward form,
Who will mendicity itself adorn.

^{*} Who is prepared to deny this? no one having common sense, and extensive intercourses with the professing world!

So, now, the world in raptures those adore Who feed its appetites, and promise more; Who see its present and prospective worth, In mind and words; and glowing set it forth, As heaven's bright image--(albeit yet to come!) And only claim the glory as their own. Hence—who has made two spears of grass to rise, Where one but grew, is lauded to the skies, As man's great patron—wonder of the age!* Statesman and patriot, philosopher and sage! While millions sacrifice to Frenchman's blood, Hail him their Saviour-toast him as their God! Thus honour to the man who acts a part, To feast man's senses, or his pride of heart, In his great praise, tongues eloquently move, While dumb and speechless of the God of love! Thus, earthly, do they think and speak of earth, And prove they know not the celestial birth. Albeit among the Galellians some, In nature's pride inquire, what must be done To work the works of God—to please high heaven, To save their souls, and have their sins forgiven. To whom the Saviour—'tis by Jehovah's power, That man believes—the Godhead is the doer, Of this great work, the sov'reign gift of grace, God is the author—God's be all the praise. Were you indeed, true follow'rs of me, Your hearts desire and prayer to God would be, To give your souls imperishable bread, That on it you might evermore be fed, To life eternal—here each soul would feast, Wonder, adore, that it was made a guest At this rich banquet—and in holy strife Contend for me, as the true bread of life! But the you 've seen me, this you don't believe, Or that my flesh, can life eternal give. †All that the Father gave me, shall confess

[†] The stupid Jews, (like the stupid Arminians of the present day) thought, that the character of Christ and of his doctrine, was to be estimated by the artificial distinctions of life, or the numbers that followed him: Jesus saw into their hearts---and calmly replied, "All that my Father hath given me shall come unto me."---This was the Elect Head's consolation, so it must be of the evangelical minis-

I am the Lord—their souls great righteousness. For this they'll labour, and for this they'll groan, 'Till all my fulness shall be made their own. Such is the Father's will—it must be done! From his all-glorious, everlasting throne, He says, My counsel shall forever stand, My work shall prosper in my Servant's hand: All who 're to life ordained, will believe, I come to seek them, and they'll me receive. The Father gave them---what he gave, I prize-For them Christ liveth, and for them he dies— With me they'll suffer, and with me they'll rise! Cease ye to murmur at the sov'reign grace, Which the great doctrine of my lips displays. Is your eye evil because I am good? Shall th' hungry starve because you hate the food? What's gall and wormwood to your carnal mind, More sweet than honey, my elect all find! Drawn by the Father, my embrace they seek-Undrawn by him—in sin's dark grave they sleep. Thus it is written in prophetic word, "And all thy people shall be taught of God." If taught of him, on them convictions fall That Christ's their Lord, their God, their all in all. Indignant, now the multitude depart—

The words of Christ had cut them to the heart.
The false professor found his guile explor'd,
The Pharisee, the idol he ador'd
Denounced as loathsome in the sight of God.
So, still the doctrine of electing love,
When preach'd DETECTS, and hypocrites all prove*—

† Nothing is more frequent in the ministry of Arminians than for them to say—did we believe, "once in grace, always in grace; we would live as we list---we would eat, drink and be merry, and indulge ourselves in all sin."--For once they speak truth! they would do so---and in that very acknowledgment testify, that their inclima-

Let's leave such doctrine—Satan is its sire, And every one who holds it is a liar. Albeit, there 's some who think the middle way, Is the expedient; and warm profess to pray, That those who preach the doctrine, and who revile, May mutual yield, and on each other smile, In christian love and unity; while each esteem, HALF TRUTH, HALF LIES, the Gospel's glorious theme? Ye hypocrites! ye serpents! can you tell, How you may escape the devil and his hell? All now, the Christ forsook, except the few, To whom he said—"will ye forsake me too?" The impetuous Peter, answer'd for the rest, And thus their feelings and their views express'd. Lord of our life, to whom then shall we go-There's none our hearts desire to serve below But thy dear self—thou hast the words of life— Thee, we will follow in thy peace and strife. Depart from thee! what, when we feel assur'd Thou art the Christ, the anointed of the Lord, On whom we rest our oft delighted eye, And to thy arms for endless refuge fly: Thou must be ours, or we forever die! Bless'd art thou Simon, Jesus then replied, To me in bonds eternal, thou 'rt allied; My Father taught thee who and what I am, The brightness of his glory—sin's atoning lamb. You twelve I have chosen—and you seem to prove Yourselves confirm'd in faith and holy love. Yet of your number, one is full of evil, And in the end, will prove himself a devil. Thus will it be, in every age to come, That in my church below, there will be some Assign'd, or chosen in God's providence, To Zion, various service to dispense, Who yet, essential, have no part in grace, Or of my chosen, or regenerate race. And now the tabernacle feast came on; To which, Christ's brethren urge him to be gone. No man, said they, if honest, ere will claim, tion is to sin! that a carnal, sensual, devilish nature, is still their own! The child of grace however, cannot live in, or love sin-holiness is his element, for God has made him a new creature! the Spirit has made him holiness unto the Lord! unto Jehovah!

From hidden deeds the meed of public fame; If you and your mission be indeed divine, Why not appear in Jewry at this time? Where now are met our rulers, great and wise,-They'll prove thy power infernal—thy doctrine lies. Thus did their conduct forcibly express That nature's ties are wide from those of grace, That who, of th' flesh, were breth'ren of the Lord, Revil'd the Christ, and all his truth abhorr'd. To them, Immanuel thus himself address'd, And on their minds, his heavenly doctrine press'd: My time, said he, is not arrived to go To Judea's feast: with you it is not so. Your time is always ready; you can fill Your part in union with this vain world's will— Whose children you, by nature's spirit are,— One in their labours and their earthly care. You, they cannot hate—you, they will receive, And all the service that you have to give. Their pride you flatter, and their maxims learn, For their idolatries with zeal you burn; Nor will the world e'er cease to smile upon A man or devil, if he but prolong Their pride—and pomp—he's timbrel and their song. Go then, the world's own children, to the feast— You each, no doubt, will prove a welcome guest. One will be with you, after whose dark work Has more progressed, I also will go up. Till then, my going is forbid of him, Who's God around me, and a God within. The world hates me because I prove it evil, A mass of sin, and captive to the Devil. I am ordain'd of God, to seek and save Those whom Jehovah loves and to me gave. The time, the place, for me to meet with them, By God 's determin'd, tho' unknown to men. Where'er their sojourn on this woe-worn earth, There shall my word and spirit give them birth. At the FULL time, the Saviour secret goes Up to the feast, where murmuring friends and foes Inquire for him—or if he's to appear At their great banquet, and his truths declare. 'Twas then, as now—they murmur'd different views Of Christ—his miracles and glorious truths.

Some thought him a good man—and some a bad, Some thought him wisdom—and some said he 's mad— As now 'twas then—a thousand notions rose In man's vain mind, of him, who none e'er knows, But those to whom the spirit's power is given, 'To feel themselves a HELL, and Jesus Christ their HEAVEN!

To all the malice, ignorance and lies Of these revilers, Jesus thus replies. My doctrine that, in boldest terms, embrace The fallen nature of the human race, And God's discriminating, sov'reign grace, Is not my doctrine, but it is that of him, Who sent me on earth to save from hell and sin. To him who does Jehovah's will perform, Which will is by his spirit to transform, And from which will, my people are all born; He shall the doctrine know, as God's own truth, Or hoary age, or inexperienced youth. Whoe'er has aught of his vain self to say, As agent in salvation's work or way, Is a blasphemer, or a Deity! There is a glory in the vast design And mighty act, of pard'ning human crime, Of which, Jehovah never will dispense One ray to any but Omnipotence. I seek not mortal's, but Jehovah's fame-This proves itself from who, and whence I came. The Son of man has nothing—nothing claims On earth, but sufferings, infamy and pains; The Son of God, demands an equal share, In th' Father's glory, of which he 's heir. *Ye know me, and ye know from whence I am, My earliest and my latest years as man: In all my acts, in all my words, I've been Harmless, and undefiled, and free from sin. A life like mine, is the best guarantee, I honour God, and he will honour me. And now the last day of the feast arrives—

Arminianism here, with its characteristick ignorance, supposes that those Jews knew him as the Saviour, when it was his mere life as an harmless man, and good citzen, that Jesus is speaking of; and which they knew from first to last: hence he said—"which of you convinceth me of sin."

Jesus stands forth, and vehemently cries, Whoever thirsts, O let him come to me, (Whate'er his nation or his crimes may be,) And drink the waters that I will reveal, Which in his soul, shall prove a living well. Man thirsts for pleasure, honour, and for wealth-The poor for bread, the sick man pants for health. 'Midst this vast concourse, is there not one, Who thirsts for life in God's eternal Son? Not one, who lifts his eyes and heart to me, And cries, O Christ, my soul does pant for thee, More than the swelling fish pants for the sea! If such there be—to me, O sinner come, And share the river flowing from my throne. Fierce now the wrath of rul'd and rulers grew— To mount of Olives, Immanuel then withdrew; There thro' night watches, Jesus sought the face Of his great Father, and his lov'd embrace. To cheer and elevate once more his heart In ardent zeal to finish the great part, Design'd him to fulfil—the Father heard The voice of his beloved, and appear'd To his delighted vision, in those glories high, Which the Son shared from all eternity. Again, the Saviour felt the mighty glow Of Deity's own consolation, flow Through all his soul; and strengthen'd to sustain The labours, sorrows, o'erwhelming shame-That now were forming for his life's last scene! The day return'd, again he came among The motley group, and wonder-gazing throng, Within the temple; where as he meekly taught, The Scribes and Rulers to his presence brought, A woman, taken in adulterous sin-And, tempting, ask'd that she be judg'd by him. Master, say they, what punishment is due To her transgressions—shall we here pursue The course prescribed by Moses, who doom'd All culprits like her to be swiftly ston'd, Till they were dead—but Master, what say'st thou? Was their inquiry, with the artful view, To tempt him in some seeming form, to stand In opposition to divine command

To their great leader given; that attain'd, And well they knew, that furious and inflam'd, The passions of the Jews would urge them on, In murderous wrath to kill the Holy One. Immanuel stoop'd, and on the ground he wrote, As if he heard not what these serpents spoke. Again they ask him-while his fingers trace Their moral portrait and their own disgrace. He rais'd himself and thus the throng address'd-Why have ye on me thus, this question press'd? Because your natures were so sunk in sin, Your appetites so beastly and unclean, That e'en your plighted matrimonial oaths, Could not the flood-gates of your lusts oppose-To save your species from a brute-like state, And the fell curse, unbridled lusts create, God gave to Moses a command to kill The woman, that in the foul transgression fell. But I bring forward other means to check Your brutal passions, and your fears beget; Yet I forbid not any to fulfil The law of Moses, and the adultress kill. Whoe'er is sinless,* let him cast a stone-"Till all ye righteous have your missiles thrown. The Saviour's words the hypocrites now felt, And stood convicted of their secret guilt; Abash'd, retreated from Immanuel's eye, Nor more insisted that the culprit die. The woman only, with the Saviour staid-To whom, in gentlest accents now he said, Thine-accusers, woman, are they then all gone, And uncondemn'd have left thee here alone? Then go in peace—I know thy heart contrite, And that thou seest thyself in a true light As chief of sinners. I break no bruised reed! But every stream of godly sorrow feed! To judge you after different laws of men,

† In the same manner our modern Pharisees, alias Arminians, will shrink away from the eye of Jesus, in the judgment day!

^{&#}x27;Tis well that this law of Moses' is abrogated, or the numerous, perfect and sinless professors in the Methodist church, would have prodigious labour---and vast would be the havor they would make, of the frail daughters of Eve!

Is not my province—that power is given them, Whose kingdom is below-go sin no more, Lest a worse evil fall you than before. The Jews returning—Christ once more began To preach himself, the light and life of man! 'The world, said he, in grossest darkness lies, In sin conceived—in sin it lives and dies; In sparks of their own kindling they pursue A thousand paths, nor find the one that 's true. Nor in their darkness and their errors think, Their feet are sliding down damnation's brink; Or care they for the endless worlds to come, If they but have possessions in this one. I am the light!—who follows me shall find Joys that shall fill his vast, immortal mind. His path shall shine in brightening prospects on, 'Till death shall bear him to celestial noon Of day immortal—where the Son of God, Shall ceaseless, spread his glories all abroad, O'er every eye; and warm each holy soul, And consummate the vision of the whole. One point, the subject 's brought to—that is this— Whoever hopes, or seeks for heavenly bliss, Must learn of me—the beggar and the prince Alike, must my bless'd Spirit still convince, I am their light.—The life of man proclaims In every age, that darkness o'er him reigns, In reference to that world to which he goes, In all its blessedness and all its woes. Ye judge me after my mere form as man, Nor know from whence I came—or who I am— Tho' I be clothed in flesh, can ye not see, No signs, no features of the God in me? Has ever man or creature spoken as I speak? Can man or angels, my great acts repeat? O blind, blind mortals—first of those to come In after years, who shall esteem the Son Angelic-super-human-or much less-And treat his blood and his great righteousness, As nothing better than their own vile forms, And God's own image, class with guilty worms. But they and you shall all die in your sins-And when you grasp at heaven, your hell begins.

ALL ARE IN SIN-they who do not believe in me, In sin continue, through eternity! Condemn'd already!—ere my gospel came! And not believing, they condemn'd remain. Not by my gospel cursed! But by the law, Other condemnation, in my word none e'er saw! I go my way, to my great throne on high, By paths unknown to e'en the vultures eye. In vain you'll seek me—neither can you come To where I go, when my great work is done. Ye are from beneath, but I am from above-In different course our thoughts and feelings move. Mine flow to glorify Jehovah's name, And yours, to prove from sin and hell they came. I have many things to say and judge of you-But he who sent me, is forever true, Or sleeps his vengeance, or his judgments slow. Whoe'er continues in my word will prove, They are the objects of my Father's love; For 'tis ordain'd that this shall be a sign, Who have me theirs, and are forever mine! They shall know the truth, the truth shall make them free

From earth, from hell, from sin and misery. Whoe'er professes to be born of God, And then returns to tread in sin's broad road, By this will manifest they're not my sheep: For all my flock, Jehovah's power keeps! Ye boast of freedom, when the slaves of sin, Call Abraham Father, tho' no more like him Than vulture 's like the dove-he, friend of God-Ve thirst to shed your very Maker's blood. What dire delusion overspreads your brain, When children's place with Israel's God you claim: Call him your Father—of his favours tell— When Satan's your sire, and your portion hell. Thus countless numbers thro' a future age, Shall speak of God, and of themselves presage In different forms and names, themselves profess, Begot of God, and subjects of his grace; When darkness shrouds their mind—their hearts will

Against my glory, and my truth engage

Your Father Abraham, saw my day afar, Beaming resplendent as the polar star; Rejoicing saw it with exceeding joy-The blessed PRELUDE, all his thoughts employ. Before his day I was—the same shall be Thro' life—in death—and all eternity! Furious, the incarnate demons now become, And breathing slaughter, essay Christ to stone, E'en in the temple—where, profess'd they came, To worship in Jehovah's awful name. Full well that scene our modern forms describe, Or rampant vanity or wounded pride. The ample temple, fretted aisles and dome, The gilded pulpit, and the organ's tone, Feed thousand's vanity, and bid them rise In self-esteem, above the very skies. But should some one by accident appear Within their temple, and the truth declare; Contrast their temple with their hearts and mind, That beastly foul—and this more beastly blind, How would their pride, insulted, urge them on, To curse the doctrine and the preacher stone With calumny—contempt, and each bad name, Until they murdered all his honest fame. Jesus retired from the infuriate throng, Within the temple—and as he pass'd along, He saw a man who from his birth was blind, With whom he stopped in purposes most kind. The disciples notice and inquire of him, Whether the parent's or the child's great sin Had been the cause: The Saviour, brief replies, Ye err in judgment why he has no eyes. This man nor parents either e'er did sin, More than all others who are born therein. What think you? those on whom the tower fell Were greatest sinners than have went to hell? Or those whose blood with Pilate's offering flow'd, When sacrificing to his idol God? I tell you nay-nor longer dream ye thus-Man—one and all—are 'neath the law's dread curse. One mind they have—it 's darkness—awful night— One heart they have-it 's enmity to light-One path they have—the broad and downward road-

They worship the creature and the world 's their God. One heaven the righteous have in worlds to come-One hell the wicked find, their endless doom-God ne'er has taught you that there are degrees Of joy in heaven, or torment in those seas Of Tophet's flame. Each saint 's ordain'd to be, Heirs of God's glory and joint heirs with me! Proud man—false teachers may from this inquire, What greater portion Israel can desire, And what they are, who look for something higher? The fire prepared for Satan and his crew, Is the dread portion of each sinner too; The doctrine of degree, of hell and heaven; Springs from man's pride, and is delusion's leaven. Man's natural, and his moral blindness too, But serve to show what sov'reign grace can do. All nature's maladies its power can quell; Its mighty acts redeem from sin and hell. The works I work, inverting nature's laws, Proclaim who is the essential and first cause; And well may prove to all the human race, The secret omnipotence of reigning grace. For sov'reign judgment to the world I came-Eyes give I to the blind, feet to the lame-I quench the light of those who think they see, Make blind and lame each righteous pharisee. Who enters not into the fold of grace, By me the door, shall never see the face Of God in peace. Who climbs some other way Into the fold, shall in the judgment day, Be sentenced as a robber of his God, And feel forever, his avenging rod. All that have come before me, are but thieves-Their doctrine falsehoods, and their life deceives; The mantle of their literary fame, When raised, but left them a mere Rabbi's name.

I am aware that this sentiment will make a hue and cry! But I believe that the scriptures will fully support the sentiment: unless they represent a Devil in chains, less a Devil than when roaming at large! Should any person of the calvinistic faith, offer any argument, or authority, drawn from the scriptures, or sound philosophy to the contrary, I shall duly notice it!—If I am wrong, Arminianism is right!

Their vain traditions, dawning day did quench, *Their light delusion—and their presence, stench. Again I say, I am the only door To heaven-thro' which the rich man or the poor, Can ever enter. - This the sheep well know, And other way, into the fold wont go: For they are helpless, and salvation crave, And feel my arm Omnipotent to save. At my command, my spirit seeks my sheep, At my command, their wand'ring feet he'll keep-He sanctifies, or puts each of them forth. From east to west, and from the south and north, I call them by that spirit—lead them out From nature's darkness, and the world's vile ROUT. I go before them in that Spirit's power— They follow me—I keep them every hour! My voice they hear—they know 'the certain sound.' Tis music in their ears—a balm for each wound! A stranger's voice they will not follow now, A stranger's voice my sheep can never know. When mine they've heard—a stranger's voice they'll flee,

As plague and pestilence or infamy.
All but my sneep, do only force their way
Into the fold, to make the sneep their prey,
Make merchandize of pasture and of flock—
Insult—betray—and artfully provoke,
To their BASE PROJECTS, those who think no guile,
And glory in the infamy and spoil.
I'm the good shepherd, and my life I give,
That my dear sneep, may all forever live;
Their lives are hid with me, their Christ, in God—
I'll wash them clean, in my own precious blood.
Each one I know—they 're ever in my view—
On earth I'll own them, and in glory too.

^{*} Will the Baptist society ask themselves, what servants or service they have derived from their theological seminaries? Or, if Baalam's ass, was not about as laborious and luminous a divine, as any one of the protoges of these institutions has been! Or if Judas Iscariot moved less from under the influence of the mammon of unrighteousness, than these excrescences do! Let the Baptist church ask, when or where they have seen them evangelically engaged; and the merits of the case are met:—Surely they have a right to do so, when this fry have cost them $100,000!

Me they shall know as him whose blood was spilt, To wash their souls and free them from their guilt. Not more distinctly does my Father know, Me, as his Son, from creatures here below, Than I know those among the human race, Who are my sheep, and destin'd heirs of grace. And now arrives the long-expected time, When Gentiles shall appear as sheep of mine; As such, the Father gave them to his Son, That Jew and Gentile might in me be one! They are wand'ring now in sin and darkest night— Them I must also bring to heavenly light. They shall hear my voice, and enter in my fold— One flock, one shepherd, will the end unfold. You ask again—if I'm the Christ of God? Still unbelieving in my solemn word. Once more, I bid you all my works survey, And due attention to their import pay. If ye believe not, it is indeed because, Ye are not my sheep, or subjects of my laws As Mediator-my sheep hear and follow me From earth, from hell, from sin I'll set them free; I give unto them an ETERNAL life! They are my bride—my long betrothed wife— They ne'er shall perish, or from my hand be pluck'd-The everlasting arms shall bear them up, Thro' all the fury of life's stormy sea, With me they'll suffer, and then reign with me. My Father gave me all my chosen sheep; He loves them in me, and will safely keep, The shepherd and the fold—with him I'm one-They know the Father, who have known the Son! Ye stone me now-say ye-for which good deed, Does all your rage and violence proceed? Or would ye have me, my very self deny, And for your excuse, admit myself to lie. Make what you will of the eternal truth, I'm Son of man, and God's co-equal both-You hate the doctrine—whence is your dislike? Because if true, my judgment must be right. I judge you ignorant, sinful and accursed— In earthly things and selfish views immersed. Now treading down the broad frequented road,

To hell's dark caverns—Satan's dread abode. Nor can you think if I Jehovah be, That of yourselves to judge you can be free. But to my word, your every thought must bow, And own without me, you can nothing know. This galls your pride, your vanity and fame-Dependant leaves you with the meanest name Upon my teaching—bids your boasted lore, Lie prestrate in the dust and me adore. As little children, ye must learn of me, However great, however wise you be. These truths repeated, still you wont believe, But think by wisdom and your deeds you'll live. This strong delusion on your minds will dwell, Till undeceiv'd you raise your eyes in hell. The doctrine of my Godhcad and my GRACE, Is what you abhor—as will the human race In every age-'gainst these will hell array Its fiercest front, and men their guile display In subtle lore; these truths will test and prove Who know the Son, and whom the Aliem* love; Who take the glory of my GRACE away, As sov'reign, free, discriminating, may As well deny my proper Deity!

In Bethany, Immanuel now appears Mong those he loves, and who himself reveres: They had recent laid their brother in the tomb, And all was lamentation and deep gloom. When Christ appear'd, the weeping Mary cried, Lord, hadst thou been here, our brother had not died! } To whom, the Saviour thus august repli'd: The resurrection and the life I am— I made—I kill—I keep—destroy or save vile man: I give the faith by which the soul shall rise, From sin's dark grave and soaring reach the skies! I too will raise the bodies of all men, And in those bodies, acquit, approve, condemn. Whoe'er believes in me, shall never die--God's be the glory—every heart reply. But come and shew me where your brother lays, And soon your sorrow shall be turn'd to praise. E'en tho' the worms are battening on his flesh,

And at the fountain of his heart refresh Their appetites voracious-still, your dead Shall hear my voice and leave his loathsome bed. The grave now reach'd, the Saviour said to some Attendant on him-roll away the stone; This done, Immanuel raised his eyes to heaven, And said, Father! I thank thee, that to me is given Thy gracious ear;—that always thou dost hear, And answer to my ever fervent prayer: That now I do, in feeble mortal's form, A deed, from which some present here, shall learn, I'm God their Saviour, and thine own first-born! This homage paid, the anointed cried, come forth Thou Lazarus, mouldering in the humid earth! The dead arose—the event was made the mean, Of raising many from the grave of sin, To a new life, in th' kingdom of Christ's grace, Their precious pledge of everlasting peace. The Pharisees now heard of Christ's great deed-All former bounds, their passions here exceed; And now a council's called, and prompt convene, And fierce determine here to close the scene Of the Messiah's life. Then, of his foes, Caiphas, (high priest of the Jews) arose, And thus address'd prophetic words to them, Tho' priest nor people did their import ken: Ye do not appear thus much to know, said he, That 'tis expedient that this man should be An offering—that our nation may keep free. Or that this event shall gather from afar, Our scattered tribes, and all to Judea draw. If the great deeds and doctrines of this man, Are but directed to some earthly plan Of aggrandizement, in this event they say, He'll stir up th' Roman's cruel jealousy, Who will come and take our liberty away. The counsel is—that now this man be slain-His single life will be a nation's gain. To this, the council one and all agreed, And now prepare to execute the deed. But Jesus knew their bloody, base intent, And with his followers in retirement went: There waited till the Paschal feast drew nigh,

The time appointed when himself must die. His visits now, to different friends he paid, E'er he was numbered with the sleeping dead. And Bethany once more receives the Lord, And Laz'rus spreads again his ample board. While here the Saviour with his followers eat, The pious Mary, bath'd and wash'd his feet; Anointing them with unguent soft and sweet. At this, indignant, Judas thus observ'd, Why is this waste?—or why have ye thus serv'd The feet of Jesus with such costly oil— Why was it not used in charity's sweet toil? The value would be full three hundred pence, Which to the poor would varied good dispense. How many bodies, and how many souls now die, For want of means, that ointment might supply! This said arch Judas, not that once he cared, Or if the poor were fed, or if they starved. The name of charity, or Christ he would press Into his service, that he might possess Himself of money. This dear aim, here was cross'd-He deep deplored that all these pence he lost; Nor could he rest, until he made it good— And to that end, he sold the Saviour's blood. Such Judas was—and such was Judas God! No lack of likeness in the present brood Of begging teachers—who compass earth and sea, So they get money for self charity. They cry for gold—rebuke—exhort and threat— Nor can they good perform, till that they get! To whom, as Judas, thus the Saviour says: Think ye herein, that this true zeal displays? I feel myself most worthy of your all— What's given to me shall ne'er unfruitful fall: Or in my person, or that of my saints.— The water given, when either of us faints, Shall be recorded as an act of love, And a full recompense received above. Who love me in my members, do proclaim, That they are true believers in my name: Who give to me, by serving my elect, Shall in their souls, the choicest peace beget, Israel I love—for Israel live and die—

For them I rise—for them I reign on high! For them I feel—for them I intercede— E'en God's elect, and Abraham's faithful seed. The world is Satan's—that I pray not for— I pray for those, for whom my soul I pour Out unto death*—what cause of wonder then, That my own love should be surpass'd by men! tE'en Judas here, exalts himself above The God of Jacob, in his claims to love! Ten thousand thousand, shall the world afford, Who, Judas-like, shall rise above the Lord; More full in charities—in grace still higher— Save all the world and Devils from their fire. Should not my doctrine and their claims agree, They'll fill the measure of their charity, By cloaking that, and telling lies for me. Who have my mind as teachers by me sent, For Israel's weal they labour, and they're spent In charities and doings for the souls Of my elect; this all their heart controls. Their charity, their zeal, their labour and their love.

* If Jesus Christ prays not for the world.—Who that has the mind that was in him can pray for it? If Jesus Christ prays only for those whom the Father hath given him, out of the world, and had the Spirit without measure: how can the Holy Ghost ever make intercession in the hearts of genuine believers for the salvation of all men? Let them answer this, whom it concerns:—for our own part we believe it mere nature's ebullition of passion; or the trimming policy of those, who would be something more than even Jesus Christ himself, at least in the estimation of the world. The simple fact is—the Holy Ghost never put it into the heart of man, yet to pray for the salvation of the world, or all men—but only for those whom the Father has given Christ, out of the world!—If the contrary, then the Holy Ghost makes intercession in Christ for one thing, and his people for another!

† This is a striking incident! Judas, judging from appearances, was really more charitable, benevolent and evangelically zealous than the Lord Jesus Christ himself—and yet he was a Devil! Who may not, after this, suspect mere appearances! May we not suspect those popular Baptist D. D's, who build splendid, round, meeting houses in large commercial cities, and cheat orphan and widow, friend and stranger, out of 50,000 dollars to accomplish it! Or who build Baptist colleges and theological seminaries, and defraud the the community out of 100,000 dollars.

Is to them peculiar—its value known above! No trumpet sounds their fame—no tongues proclaim What mighty acts of love their lives mantain; Nor that they save, restore, confirm, and keep My flock-and make the very world my sheep! The service that my shepherds do my fold, Is not in mortal's eulogy e'er told; When that's incentive and the world's the judge. That is all delusion—and this the pledge. And now the Saviour leaves the peaceful home, Intent once more among his foes to come. While in his way admiring crowds attend, And heaven's vast concave with hosannas rend. This multitude was fill'd with joy and dread, To think of him, whose power could raise the dead! They fondly hoped their homage might secure A living interest in his almighty power; That he, who a friend had raised from the grave, From death's dire embrace might them also save. The Pharisee's exclaim, in maddening throes, Behold this Jesus—the world after him all goes.— Our mandates, frowns and laws do not prevail; The people crowd him and his presence hail! Some Greeks attendant at the paschal feast, Eager inquire if Jesus be a guest— They say to Philip, sir, we wish to see Jesus—the Jew's and Gentile's mystery. Philip and Andrew thus inform their Lord, And HE arranswer to the Greeks afford. The hour is come, in which I am glorified-Life is man's glory; -mine that I have died! The hour of my miracle and doctrine 's gone-Those ensigns I resign,—and stand alone— The subject of man's meanest, basest form, In human eyes a grovelling reptile worm--Such will the Greeks behold me, and despise,

^{*} It is very important, that we know upon what ground we estimate, or from what considerations we are attached to the name of Christ! This multitude lauded him as one able to give bodily health, and to preserve or raise the body from the grave. The name of Christ now a days, is found excellent, and duly lauded by a multitude, because, in that they can get a living from the turn-spit of a college kitchen to the D. D. president.

My life recorded as but foolish lies. The corn of wheat that's buried in the earth. But dies to give a countless number birth; So thus I die,—and dying raise to heaven, The numerous seed to me in covenant given. My death 's their life-my infamy their crown-Hell claim'd their souls—I give that hell my own! While thus he spake, dire horrors seize his soul, And from his lips, strange words began to roll; My soul, he said, is troubled—what shall I say? Father! O save me from this awful day! So craves my trembling flesh:—but for this hour, Heft thy glory, and my regal power. 'Tis past! the energies of grace divine, Now makes my prayer—thy will be done—not mine— O Father, glorify thy glorious name! I'll bear the cross and glory in the shame. In awful thunder, now a voice from heaven, Replies to Jesus; and this answer 's given-My name I've glorified—and now proclaim, That I will glorify that name again! In thy obedience, law is magnified, And now my justice must be satisfied By thy life's blood. - My mind is ever one-The cov'nant's sealed—THY WORK must now be done, And die thou must, my nameless, matchless Son! The multitude had heard the voice, and stood O'erwhelm'd with awe and wrapt in musing mood. This, Christ perceives, and now his lips repeat His glorious truth in accents bland and sweet. This voice said he, for you, not me, has come-It testifies, I have Jehovah's pleasure done. He hears my prayer—has promised to fulfil Through me, the counsel of his sov'reign will. A little while the light remains with you— That light's my precept and my example too. My sinless life, and my pure guileless heart,† ^{*} Spiritual and eternal life to the elect, was, and is, in the promise of God, as sure as the death of Christ was made sure by the promises of God.

[†] This is a passage of scripture that Mr. Fuller uses with much apparent triumph to prove, that it is the duty of all men to exercise faith, saving faith in Christ! when in fact, it has nothing to do with

Of Moses? law a comment does impart; This shows what man is ever bound to be, In his relation to the Deity. Such light's offensive to the sons of men; It tests them all, and all it will condemn. While I am with you, walk ve after me-My light may set you from delusion free; Give you, as in a faithful mirror, view Of what God's laws require of man to do. This knowledge given, and men will contrite cry, What shall we do, or whither shall we fly From wrath to come—and then shall grace reveal My works, to justify, my blood to heal, And that I've power to make alive, and power to kill. My miracles, my ministers, God will use, My life, my word, or what means he may choose, Of sin, of righteousness, and judgment, to convince, And bring the soul to Israel's penitence. Without his power, the means are vain and naught-The present proves it, as the past has taught. What miracles were wrought in Egypt's land, When Moses, by Jehovah's high command, Spread midnight darkness o'er her, at mid-day-Her waters turn'd to blood-or her first-born slav. But Pharaoh and his host, impious stood Against the wondrous workings of a God. So Israel witness'd thro' the wilderness, The depths of wo, and heights of earthly bliss; And all by miracle.—For them there came Manna from heaven, as a shower of rain; For them, when panting with a deadly thirst, From flinty rock, the living streams out-burst: For them the clouds a moving pillar go, To guide them daily all their journey thro'. For them a pillar of mirac'lous light, Appears, to guide them thro' the shades of night. The Sun recedes, that Israel's tribes may see, To strike, pursue, and kill their enemy. Again-when Israel fights in Ajalon, To give them light, Jehovah stops the moon:

the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in Christ Jesus, as & Saviour! But as a moral example!

Yet Israel's prophet cries, who hath believ'd, God's own message, or his word receiv'd. And now for three years I have daily done, Such miracles as have been perform'd by none. Yet men believe not!—this will fully give Conclusive proof, that men, by God believe! Such doctrine does the word of God declare-Hence says the prince of Prophets, great Isaiah, To whom hath Jehovah's arm been revealed? To whom has salvation's prophecy been sealed? They cannot believe without Jehovah's arm— Miracle and judgment but surprise—alarm. Men's eyes are blinded, harden'd are their hearts: God leaves them so to act their various parts Of opposition to his sacred word, And of their darkness evidence afford. So God ordains, that heaven and earth may trace The faith of Israel to his sov'reign grace!! So God ordains, that Israel e'er may own, Salvation is of Jacob's God alone! And other faith, detest, denounce, disown! Did signs and miracles convert the soul, Then all who see or know them would be whole. That, signs and miracles are not design'd to do, But man's unbelief and awful darkness show, And round my earthly life, due glory throw. Who believes on me, believes too on his name, From whom, inspired, the sacred scriptures came. Man's moral infamy that book reveals-True faith perceives it, and the soul then feels Itself all sin-all hell-on me it cries-I show my cross—to that the wretch now flies; There lays him down beneath sin's awful load— The mountainst melt and leave him in my blood. When in my blood, sin ne'er can burn again, Forever quench'd is the accursed flame. He sees the Father, who has once seen me-I was, I am, and ever am to be!

^{*} The awful sentiment, that saving faith is the mere belief of the fuct that Christ is the Messiah, upon the testimony of twelve men and their miraculous doings—has, for its Father, in the Baptist society, the Arian Robinson—and Alex. Campbell has but revived from the writings of Robinson, the Arian delusion.

† Judges v. 5.

The brightness of the Father's glory I, His person's image from Eternity? Who sees me truly, ever see me this-The vision's glory and the sense is bliss! An all-devouring, great desire reigns Within believers, while each soul exclaims, "All hail, Immanuel! my heaven thou art in whole:" Hail! NAMELESS object to my musing soul! Who believes in me, in darkness don't abide; I give him grace and will to glory guide. Whoe'er rejects me, continues in his sin, And proves I knew him not or died for him! Those the Father gave me, in Providence I keep-In grace my spirit shall each of them seek: As prodigals shall they come to my arms, There rest embalm'd in my ten thousand charms. The word I have spoken that shall judge all men, Those left in nature, and those born again. That word does law and gospel too embrace-The world that judges, but this the fold of grace. That word has said, the world is dead in sin, But those in me, are every whit made clean. And when the day ordained shall arrive, That word shall prove its truth—or as I live.* God has commanded what I've spoke on earth, Has made that word the mean of spiritual birth; And so will make it to the end of time-Man's all the grace, the glory, Lord, be thine! Who knows as I, God's commandments sure, Ordain'd to give, and to eternal life secure; Obedient to his great command will tell Of sov'reign grace redeeming man from hell. The word, the counsel, of the Lord he'll preach; No other gospel know, receive, or teach .-Or if the world abhor, defame, despise, Wrap him in infamy, or pierce with lies, He'll preach it still, in it will "toil along, Weep tears of joy, and burst into a song!"

^{*} Here is another favorite passage of scripture that Andrew Fuller makes use of to support his darling proposition—i. e. that it is the duty of all men who have the scriptures to exercise faith, &c.—Now suppose that the above interpretation is correct, and how miserably ignorant he must have been of the import of the "word," in this place.

THE INSTRUCTIONS

CHRIST TO HIS DISCIPLES,

HIS AGONY, BETRAYMENT, DEATH, AND RESURRECTION.

The public ministry of Christ now ends-Designed a model for all whom HE sends, To labor in doctrine and to preach the word, Or Zion prosper, or exalt the Lord! And now Immanuel with his friends retire, To form their minds—with zeal their breasts inspire. He loved, he sought, and found them—and still loved, As now example and his precept proved. He supped with them the night he was betray'd, And after that himself a servant made. Their feet he washes, and he wipes them too, And says to them, "Wist ye not what I do? I give you example in humility, For one another, do as thus you see. The love I bear you makes all service sweet, Or if I cleanse your souls or wash your feet. So will it be with those who have my mind; My saints they'll feed and serve where'er they find-When they are in need, no office then too low, For them 'neath sorrow's heaviest wave they'll bow. Ye are clean as washed by my renewing grace, And in my house ye shall have children's place. Albeit not all .- I know that with you's one, On whose dark soul that work was never done; And the's chosen to an apostle's place, He ne'er was chosen to renewing grace. His heart's against me—and soon too I'll feel The treach'ry and violence of his base heel. These words alarm you—and each anxious cry, Lord, can it—may it—will it e'er be I? To which I answer, he it is to whom I give a sop—that seals his awful doom." Thus saying, Christ to Judas gave the bread!— And now the Traitor is by Satan led. Till this, the powers of darkness were restrain'd, And Judas left in a profession feign'd.

Forth goes Iscariot to the Saviour's foes, To them the Christ's retirement to disclose. Hell moves his avarice—the ointment he had lost, *It must be made good, tho' Jesus' blood it cost! Meanwhile the Saviour in exultance cried, "Now is the Son of Man and God both glorified .--God's glorified in me, the Son of Man, In God Jehovah glorified I am! Little children, while I'm yet with you, A new commandment give I-that hear and do. Love ye each other as you all I love, And prove ye're children of your God above. By this shall all men evidently see, That ye are mine, and that ye follow me. Your joys, your sorrows, your tumults and your fears, Your conflicts, trials, groans, and flowing tears, Are to you peculiar; --- while on earth you stay, Each other comfort, for each other pray. I go my way, where yet you cannot come-All, all will leave me to my fate alone! As Jesus spake, fierce Simeon gave reply--Lord I will follow thee, or I will die! No danger, pain, or death, my soul shall shake; All is but dung and dross for thy dear sake. Wilt thou, said Jesus, lose thy life for me? Alas! proud man, thy heart deceiveth thee. The truth is this-tho' humbling you shall know-Thrice thou'lt deny me ere the cock shall crow! Thyself a lesson through all future time, Who stand in faith are kept by power of mine. Let not your hearts be troubled if I go-Ye believe in God, believe in me also. One God there is, one Mediator too-I ever live to intercede for you. In my Father's house many mansions are-I go before you, and a place prepare: And surely, if I prepare a place for you, I'll come again, and bring you all thereto; That where I am, there ye may be also. Whate'er ye ask the Father in my name, That will I do: for that I live and reign! The Father must be glorified in me--

^{*} This shows the awful power of a ruling passion.

Thus God ordained from all eternity. 'Tis glory in the highest! that I save From hell and sin all that to me he gave! If you love me, my commandments keep--Thus will ye prove ye are my ransom'd sheep: They follow me, no other voice they know; After strange voices they will never go. I have been your comfort in our toilsome path-Another Comforter the Father hath, That I will pray him on you to bestow, And he shall guide you all life's journey through. That Comforter's the Spirit of all Truth, The staff of Israel's age---joy of his youth! The world cannot this Comforter receive, His office know, or his work of grace perceive. But ye and all my saints are known to him; He saves from sin and makes all pure within. He dwells with you, and in you still shall be, Till mortal's lost in immortality! In life's rough pilgrimage and deep distress, I will not leave you, children, comfortless. A little while the world will no more see The Son of Man---to them will Immanuel be As one that was not---they will seek nor find, Or of his person or his life still blind. But when they see not me, the Invisible, Ye still will see me; --- also where I dwell, Because I live, ye all shall live with me---That life's co-equal with eternity! At that great day in which you shall appear In glory's regions, as my Father's heir; Then ye shall know that I am in your God---That I am your's and you are my abode! He that bath my commandments and keeps them, Will prove he loves me, and that I work in him. The Comforter, the Holy Ghost, will prove The earnest of peace and of my Father's love: He shall teach you what th' oracles reveal, Jehovah's grace---and be thereof a seal; All things I've said, to your remembrance bring, Soothe all your sorrows---make your souls to sing. O well spring up! Eternal Spirit rise Within my breast! adorn me for the skies! Peace I leave with you---'tis my special gift.---

If I be gone, that still with you is left, And shall remain till I return to you, And bring you to my heavenly glory too! I now will give you various faint idea, Of what relation to my church I bear. The husbandman is God!— I am the vine. The Spirit, agent:-instrument, the Word. Each branch the Spirit grafts in me the vine, Bears fruit, is purged and lives forever mine. Each branch men bind, or bind themselves to me, By mere profession or outward sanctity, Shall be removed—their end is to be burn'd, Tho' here they seemed with heavenly graces warm'd. Abide ye in me through the means of grace, For thus my Father will reveal his face; And thus he'll manifest to every heart, That to his glory ye are set apart. Through those means your souls shall feel and see, That I had chosen you ere you had chosen me: That I have chosen and also do ordain My people fruitful, and that fruit remain! This answers to Jehovah's great decree, That I my people from their sins should free. 'Tis further written in the Word of Grace, That God in Christ has chosen Israel's race, Ere man was formed, or angels sung above, That they be holy, without blame in love. Ye are God's workmanship—it must be good— 'Tis founded on my righteousness and blood! I am the corner stone—on me shall rise Jehovah's building tow'ring to the skies! Each stone is lively—polished by my grace:— In Zion above it has its destined place. The Temple grows tho' opposed by hell and sin, And soon I'll bring the blessed top-stone in; While all in heaven's ineffable praise, Shall shout, behold the work of sov'reign grace! I am the Head,—my Church the body is— The head existing, so the body lives. All the members, by high heaven's decree, Are framed a temple for their God in me. I am the bridegroom—Zion is the bride— Her name is graven in my hands, my side: Or as a bridegroom o'er their brides rejoice, 5 *

So I will joy o'er Sion as my choice. I am the husband—Israel is my wife-Our union ends but with the husband's life. Our marriage is that she may amply bear Fruit to her God and of his glory share. Such figures shadow forth my church and me, Here on earth, or in eternity: Then by this union once for all I say, Love ye each other, and for each other pray. The world will hate you—me it hated too: Suff'ring's my portion—sufferings wait for you. If ye were of the world, its love you would share, It loves its own—knows who and where they are. As face in water answers to its face, So human heart, in nature or in grace. That is dire darkness—enmity to God— Earth is its heaven—there 'twould make abode. This in its powers is verging to the skies— All but Immanuel is mere vanities! The world the contrast can't but feel and know. And o'er your lives will all contumely throw; Impugn your motives—feed upon your sin— Suspect your reason, call your faith a whim! When in your lives due evidence you give, That I have chosen you in me to live, It is then the world will hate you and despise, And to you act, or of you speak in lies. 'Tis thus the world will shew itself to be, Zion's fierce foe, and enemy to me. Whoe'er lives godly shall this portion have; This God to Israel did by promise give. Remember always, what before I've said, They'll wound the members if they wound the head. The servant is not greater than his Lord-As they've kept mine, they'll also keep your word. If maniac, liar, Beelzebub, and more, They've made my name, and con it o'er and o'er, If of my doctrine they incessant cry 'Tis hard--'tis guileful--delusion, and a lie-Thus God ordains my truth to testify! Whate'er my gospel is—to natural men "Tis foolishness—a tale-or less to them. They never have, nor e'er can understand The Evangelists' pen, or harp of Israel's land.

Whate'er my Gospel is, that the world hates, Or all of me, or of itself relates. When that world cries—these men or these words be The power of God-they are neither sent from me! When that world rails, and says the doctrine's lies, Or when it offers all indignities To him who preaches; then the argument Is, God's the author, and He the message sent! Fierce and more furious they raise their passions high, Till thousands of them impiously deny, That I or my Spirit ever used the word, Chosen, elect, or righteous in the Lord. But when, by grace, you fearlessly declare, That you are CHOSEN to be Christ's co-heir; The world will cry,--Election! that from Satan came. Their wrath will burn, you'll have the basest name. The world's the same in every age to come; Their souls, (as bodies), essentially are one! As tigers, have been tigers, and will be; As serpents have been and will be in subtlety. This persecution, then, you must endure, As those to follow, and those who have gone before. Though thus my life and precept testifies, Ten thousand teachers shall hereafter rise, * Whose wisdom shall presume the doctrine lies. They'll learn to think that they can so impart The Gospel's doctrine, that the human heart, Shall see, shall own, shall love, and bless their name, As stars of science, Israel's shining flame. Myself, and prophets—and my apostles too, Compared with them, will seem a drop of dew To the vast ocean—they will vaunting cry, Behold the fruits of our bright charity! In love we move: -- the world our powers own---Jew, Gentile, Turk and Pagan, all are one! With every Christian sect,—we please them all! Before us mountains rise, retire or fall! So men will dream delusion of themselves; The varied victims of Satanic spells. But all those things the world has done to me, So will it treat my GRACE's ministry.

This day exemplifies the case—hence the doctrine of expediency—the proposition to have open communion, and to fling away Creeds or Confessions of Faith!

Man knows that not, no more than God he knows; Light he calls darkness; darkness still he'll choose. Had I not come, my enemies had not felt Their conscience stinging with their recent guilt: Their mantle of forms, -of Pharisaic pride, I've lifted up, and shew'd their hearts all dyed In crimson crime. They rage, and furious cry, " He has a devil—let the monster die!" While they are tormented thus before their time Of final judgment,—ye and all ordain'd as mine, Shall have the Comforter sent from above, Who thro' your souls shall shed my Father's love The Spirit of truth within you all shall dwell, And keep you from heresies of earth and hell. These things I've spoken that you may prepare For sore affliction and my cross to bear. The time is coming that the monsters will Some of you curse, and others of you kill, In God's own name-and claim reward of him, For filling the measure of their nation's sin. And thus 'twill be with all the human race;--God's name they'll use to murder truth and GRACE! Countless the multitude who will proclaim Themselves believers in Immanuel's name: Their temples, synagogues and domes shall rise †O'er gorgeous columns, tow'ring to the skies Their dagon shall stand beside the ark of truth; That robed in gold,—this prostrate in sackcloth. Evincing still the human heart to be ^{} Here Fuller, and other disguised and open Arminians, conceive that Christ means to say, that if the Jews had not have had an opportunity to reject the gospel, they would not have had sin!— So these miserable men pervert the scripture, and virtually deny original sin!

[†] This is not so much amiss when they are honestly paid forbut when widows and orphans, mechanics and credulous brethrens are cheated to the amount of 40,000 dollars, to gratify the vanity of one church and their minister, with a splendid meeting house or when in building a college to gratify the vanity of a few fantastic pretenders to science, the community are cheated to the amount of 120 or 130 thousand dollars, we humbly conceive that it is not the Lord's work, though those creatures may have a host of retainers and dependents to proclaim to the contrary. If the Baptist society think they are interested in this reflection, they are referred to the "Columbian Star" for the necessary explanation.

Not only error, but truth's enemy. While those whose zeal shall prompt them to repel The foul aggression of this tribe of hell, Whose souls exclaim-with bitterest anguish torn, O sirs, for Christ's sake—spare that glorious form, The ark of Truth!—degraded now it lies, Cloth'd with your calumny and sophistries. Why not content your Dagon to adore? Thou lying spirit—art crying still for more! Wist ye not what we say?—heaven hear our vow-We'll rescue that or with it lie as low. 'Gainst these my servants they shall raise a yell, Whose voice is Satan's, and whose centre's hell! No device, means, or subtle art will they E'er leave untried, to make these men their prey. Their lives, their minds, their morals they'll decry, And laud each other to the vaulted sky.* Their noisy hubbub and their mighty shout, O'er those among them, and 'gainst those without, Shall lead the world, (as led since first it fell,) By sound confounding, to the groan of hell. When my great Spirit shall descend to earth, To give the souls of my elect their birth; Of sin, of righeousness, and judgment too, He shall convince, and give a vision new. In that vision they shall see their sin, And righteous the condemnation man is in— They'll see the judgment that awaits their race, And feel they're sav'd by God's free sov'reign grace. Many things I have yet to say to you; But ye my friends cannot bear them now. More knowledge of yourselves, and more of man, Or of my providence, or grace's plan, Is necessary, ere your souls can feel The glory of doctrine, I shall yet reveal. Again I say, my Spirit shall descend, ^{*} Reference to Jared Sparks' "Unitarian Miscellany," Alexander Campbell's "Christian Baptist," the "Latter Day Luminary, and Columbian Star," will furnish out an illustration of this case.— Should any thing more be wanted of explanation, let any old fashioned, evangelical, Regular Baptist minister go to Washington City, and visit the wonder-working, scientific Baptists there! The explanation will then soon be made complete, unless through some impulse of policy they should act covertly towards him.

And on your souls efficiently attend; In truth to guide you and your minds illume In what is written, and in things to come. Me he shall glorify in your bless'd sight, As Israel's glory, and the Gentiles' light! All things the Father hath, belong to me-In this, all scripture has and will agree. I am before all things—by me all things consist, The fulness of the God-head and of faith's in this. Ye are a deep unfathomable, of sin-I am a deep of grace, to make you clean. Ye are a deep of fearful emptiness-I am a deep of perfect righteousness! Deep answers unto deep—as you will feel, When my grace and glory th' Spirit shall reveal; Till your wrapt spirit shall incessant cry, "Lord Jesus come! for thee I faint-I die!" Such feelings will evince that me ye know, And in that knowledge and that grace ye grow! The world rejoices, but ye now shall weep; You shall lament, while that its festals keep. So strange it is --- the man of God in dust---The child of hell exalted in his lust---The holy nation weeping tears of blood, The world rejoicing, tho' reprobate to good. Your sorrow endureth only for a night---The morning comes of radiant, unborn light! Then shall ye know that those of heavenly birth, Sink, sigh, groan, weep, and bleed while here on earth: To triumph in their scars while Gods* endure, And angels live to worship and adore. A woman when in travailing pangs and throes, Thinks only of her peril or her woes: But when of her tender burthen she is freed, Her sorrow's forgotten, and her joys succeed. So is it with my people here below, They travail in spirit, pierced with heaviest wo; They agonizing call on Jesus' name, While every throe is threat'ning their frail frame With dissolution --- yet when all is o'er, They shall rejoice, and me the Lord adore! Or more triumphant own I've sav'd from hell, Berashith Bera Aleim-i. e. in the beginning Gods created, &c.

Than that for them I have done all things well. Ten thousand saints in glory shout my name, And thus the wonders of my acts proclaim. Great, marvellous are all thy works, they cry, Lord God Almighty! Glory of the sky! Just and true are each and all thy ways, Thou King of Saints!---Ye heavens proclaim his praise! These things are proverbs till the soul begins, In a new life, to struggle with her sins. This wisdom's dawn is when that work is done— It's perfect, when man's glory is begun. I not only love, but will pray for you-The Father loveth and has loved you too. The evidence he loves you he has given,— A heart to love me as I'm lov'd in heaven! That love, that faith, both coming from above! Are given to all in God's eternal love---No others have them --- who have them ne'er shall die: They're God's in time, and through eternity. These things I have spoken that you may have peace-They are the doctrine of my sov'reign grace: All hell may slander them and men deride, Sway'd by their lust or fill'd with legal pride. No peace to them will these bless'd truths afford-They'll abhor my doctrine, and yet call me Lord! But to my people this shall music prove---Their ears are circumcised—their hearts are love. Our meeting terminates --- the hour has come, When ye will flee and leave me all alone. Yet I still love you --- I'll ne'er your souls forsake, And this monition, as my last, now take:---Through tribulation, tumults, and great fear, Ye all will pass, while you shall sojourn here-In this dire world---such promise I have given To all who're destin'd to be heirs of heaven! And now the Saviour lifts his eyes above---Commends his followers to his Father's love. What feelings breathe in that matchless prayer! O, Zion, for thee what consolation's there! Father, says Jesus, the eventful hour is come!---I'll glorify thee---glorify thy Son! Over all flesh thou dost his power extend; Grace in the object, glory in the end.

The object, that eternal life he give To all thou hast given and ordained to live, In me their life, and thro' me grace receive. And this is life eternal, that they know Thee, the true God, from whom all blessings flow, And Jesus Christ, whom thou all sov'reign gave To the law a curse---a pris'ner to the grave. I have glorified thee thro' my life on earth; I have set thy holiness and precept forth; The law I've honored and have magnified, Nor from its curse will shrink or step aside. Thy name I've magnified to those of man Whom thou gave to me ere the world began. For them, (not for the world!) I faithful pray---For them I suffer, and for them obey. Father, no more with them may I remain---I came from thee, and to thee come again! But these thou gav'st me, still on earth abide---Father, preserve them, and their footsteps guide! Holy Father! keep them thro' thine own great power, Those whom thou gave'st me to reward this hour! Let them be one, O God! as we are one! Thy Son in thee, --- they mersed into thy Son; Our union lasting as thy awful throne! Father, whate'er of wo awaits my soul, Tho' wrath and vengeance o'er my spirit roll, Let them rejoice --- my joy do thou fulfil, In saving those thou gav'st me---thus I will. Keep them, O Father, from the evil here---That thine own workmanship they may appear, In me exalted unto righteousness---Witnesses for reigning and triumphant grace! Sanctify them, O Father, through thy truth, From the womb of th' morning, and the dews of youth! Thy word is truth---no other instrument Hast thou ordained to make man penitent: Thy word is truth---no other sourse can prove The means of blessing to the souls I love. The world, O Father! hates thy sacred word, And all the vision that it can afford. The truth is what must bless the chosen race, The doctrine I have preached, of sov'reign grace. Father! give them pastors after thine own heart,

Who shall know the truth, and that truth impart; That my sheep still may through them hear my voice, Avoid false doctrine, and in truth rejoice. For their dear sakes, myself I sanctify, Am set apart to suffer and to die. The object is, that they one and all may be, In time appointed, set apart to thee, As chosen vessels---monuments of grace---A holy nation --- a peculiar race! The TRUTH of MY GOSPEL thou hast ordain'd to be, The blessed means, from all eternity. Neither pray I alone for those who now believe, But for all who shall like precious faith receive, Throughout all ages, yet in time to come---That they may likewise thus with us be one. So that at last when all things here shall end, And my saints' glory all their thoughts transcend, E'en the world itself shall own thou didst me send! Father, I will, that those who're to me given, Behold my glory, and be heirs of heaven! Thus shall their union with thyself and me, Prove thou lov'dst them as thou hast loved me. Thy doctrine I've declared in thy name, And by my Spirit will declare the same: That they may all the rich bestowment feel Of thy eternal love, which I reveal: The revelation and the sense of this. Shall be their earnest of immortal bliss. O righteous Father! for all this I crave, By thine own word and faithfulness to save. In their salvation I am glorified, Or they not saved and in vain I've died. To me thou gave them, when thou saidst of yore, Because to death thou dost thy spirit pour, I will surely give thee a portion with the great, Prolong thy days in endless regal state; The spoil thou shalt divide most amply with the strong, And be the burthen of eternal song! Thou shalt see thy seed---the pleasure of the Lord Shall prosper in thy hand and by thy word. Thus thou hast promised---Father be it done, Thy justice here will glorify thy Son. The work I do---the reward is thine to give; For Israel I suffer---Israel then must live!

Thus spake the Saviour to the world and those The Father gave him and Jehovah chose. Such doctrine still is the great gospel's truth, Sion's song in heaven, her cordial while on earth.* In vain the worldling and the carnal wise Attempt to cloak it with their base sophistries. In vain they're brib'd, by title and by pelf, Dubb'd doctors, rabbies, masters, wisdom's self;† In vain who own it are despised, accursed, Its glory o'er the elect of God still bursts; One faith, one Lord, one baptism still is theirs; By GRACE they're saved---by GRACE are glory's heirs. The Saviour now the awful garden sought, Not there to teach, but knowledge to be taught: Salvation's captain must be perfect made, Through sufferings of unutterable grade. At Olive's base the prostrate Jesus lies, In supplications, groans, and awful cries. What thy pangs were, O Jesus! none can know, But those who to the flames of Tophet go. Whence, Christ! thy pangs, thy cries, thy sweat and blood?

What scene might shudder an incarnate God!
'Twas the prospective that began thy woes,
And heav'd thy spirit in convulsive throes.
Sinai's dire form advanced upon his view,
And round him its tempest and its darkness threw;
While from its mouth terrific thunders roar,
And flames consuming burst from every pore.
From this dread mountain forth a spirit came,
With voice appalling, cloth'd in living flame;
In adamantine grasp the Saviour took,
And thus in fury to his victim spoke.

* This is the Gospel Christ commanded to be preached, and promised to be with! He is not with any other, however the pulpit or the press may cry, "Lo! here, or lo! there."

† There is no truth under the heavens—no fact on record—no reality in nature, if this is not now one of the Devil's master strokes to corrupt the Gospel: hence, even in the Baptist society, what shoals of mere literary feathers are driving to and fro with every wind of doctrine, as ministers of the Gospel. One scrap of grammatical criticism from the "Diversions of Purley," will upset their confidence, (and well it may,) in their system of theology. These insects verify the old saying,—"The greater the grammarian, the worse the divine!"

Pay what thou owest---give me eye for eye:
Thy soul for soul, thy flesh for flesh must die*
No common death, no vulgar woes await,
Behold, prospective, thy unyielding fate.
That mountain's weight must fall upon thy soul,
Its burning lava o'er thee furious roll:
Behold its jaws extending to receive!
Hark! how it thunders---the victim justice give!
"Thou art the man"---I've sought thee and have found,

I've seiz'd thee, and thy feet and hands have bound. Thy funeral pile is ready, thou must now Ascend this mountain to its yawning brow; And in its flaming bowels thyself throw; Its fires extinguish with thy boiling blood, And make the promise of Jehovah good. Such we prospective fill'd with dire dismay The Saviour's soul, while agoniz'd he lay, On earth's cold bosom, sweating at each pore, Marr'd in his visage, cover'd with his gore. O Gethsemane! thou awful, glorious place, Type of the garden of Immanuel's grace; That garden shaded by Jehovah's wing, To which the heavens in rapturous anthems sing. A vineyard of red wine!---the Lord will keep Whose love ne'er changes, and whose eyes ne'er sleep; Lest any hurt it, he will day and night Water it with his own blood---be himself its light; For its salvation heaven and earth employ; Himself, at last, sing over it with joy. Now Christ returns to where his followers lay In sleep, unconscious of his own dismay. To whom he said—arise, and watch and pray. Temptations fierce and terrible shall fall, On your souls also, and the souls of all That follow me—be ye then doubly wise, With God to wrestle—for heaven to agonize; That no temptations lead your souls astray, From holiness to God, and me the way. Jehovah's Angel only can sustain,

^{*} The dignity of Christ's person gave infinite value to the atonement of Christ, say the Fullerites, to make out their general atonement scheme. Now the truth is, it was the measure of his sufferings that gave infinite value to it!

Through life's dread pilgrimage of toil and pain. O for that angel ever, ever cry, Who only can your souls' vast wants supply, And make your lives Jehovah glorify. While Jesus spake, Iscariot, vile, returns, With rulers, captains, soldiers and their arms. The traitor advanced to where the Saviour stood: Cried-hail! Jesus, master, the holy and the good! Around Christ's neck his viper arms he threw, Bestow'd the kiss, and sullenly withdrew. And now advanc'd the infuriate lawless band, Rage in their eye, and murder in their hand; To whom the Saviour-mortals, whom seek ye? Jesus, they answer'd—Jesus said—I'm he! When thus he spake, deep horror o'er them spread, Backward they stagger'd, and fell there as dead. Again Christ spake---wretched mortals, whom seek yes Rising, they said, Jesus---Jesus said, I'm he! (Strong emblem this of our Immanuel's voice, When utter'd to the people of his choice: First—awful thunder—then in music rolls, It kills and makes alive their wond'ring souls!) And now they seize their unresisting prey, Bind him with cords and hurry him away To Annas, Caiaphas, and the judgment-hall, To endure the insult and the rage of all. Pilate, the judge, inquires the pris'ner's crime, If civil, religious, at what place or time? His foes but answer, with demoniac roar, He's a malefactor, judge, what want you more! As then, so now, a name is oft bestow'd To screen the lawless and condemn the good. Most frequent does the wanton case apply, To heralds of the cross, who fearless cry, "Salvation's of the Lord"—to them is given, Each name offensive to the world and heaven, As---fatalist---the antinomian—friend of sin: World! judge them thus --- thus bring your verdict in, No life of innocence, no life of prayer, No warm devotions will the sland rers spare: The world, they know, still sovereign grace decries, And Pharisees Christ's righteousness despisé. Pilate his pris'ner's life and doctrine learns, His judgment's settled and his pity warms.

I find, said he, to Christ's inveterate foes, No harm in Jesus, or even yet in those Who follow him: my voice is to release Your captive meek, and let him go in peace. Then cried the Jews—if Jesus thou set free, No friend to Cæsar, Pilate, canst thou be; More accusation would thou have us bring? Then know—this Jesus makes himself a King! Who makes himself a King, must surely be A civil culprit—Cæsar's enemy! When Pilate heard, he to the hall return'd, And of the charge the lowly Christ inform'd. To whom the Saviour—whate'er my foes may say, For no earthly kingdom do I toil and pray; If that were so, 'twould be obtain'd by might, For that my servants and myself would fight. So rose the kingdoms that do now exist, By such means founded and by such are fixt. Thou art a King then, Pilate now replies, The assertion and thy state produce surprise, For this, said Jesus, I was to be born, For this have come in feeble mortal's form: The kingdom's form'd of Jew and Gentile both, Founded in righteousness, and grace, and truth! What is truth? the heathen judge inquires: He asks the question, then from Christ retires. What is truth? vain mortals still will cry, Or who will teach us what is truth or lie? The question ask'd—men from the truth recede. Nor dare the Scriptures or their hearts to read! What is truth, regen'rate souls will cry, To Jesus and his word as suppliants fly, And there in wisdom and in safety lie, Till God, who teaches, make them wise to see Their moral ruin and his remedy. Pilate once more from the hall withdrew, Where eager met him the blood-thirsty crew; To whom he said—again I testify, I find no fault in him that he should die. You have a custom that at your great feasts, From death I should some criminal release: Will ye, therefore, that Jesus be the one, And thus atone for what you say he has done? Then cried they all—no—Jesus do not spare.

Save Barabbas—the robber we prefer! So cries the world, and e'en professors too, Or Gentile worshipper, or that of the Jew-The Deist, Arian, and Arminian-all, Are robbers too, for whom prefessors call! They rob Jehovah of his sov'reign will, And all the glory that his truths reveal; They rob the Church, Jehovah's heritage, Of food and raiment—bulwark, wall, and hedge. The difference is, the robbers now must be Professors—learn'd—of some gentility. But still the same and general is the cry Give us the robber, let King Jesus die! We never have or ever will we own, We're saved by Jesus' sov'REIGN GRACE alone! We want not, will not have a King like him, The thought's abhorrent and the doctrine's sin: The pliant Pilate, politically urged, Consents to have the Saviour basely scourged: That done, the Jews and soldiery agree, To robe Immanuel in mock royalty. A crown of thorns is placed upon his head, A purple robe is o'er his body spread: A reed is placed within his harmless hand, (Mock ensign of imperial command,) While thus the rabble the passive Lamb abuse, Contemptuous they cry-hail! monarch of the Jews! His eyes they blindfold and then sportive cry, (While rudely smiting) prophet prophesy Who smote thee on this, and who upon that cheek; Come, answer us! thou model of the meek: Give proof thou art a prophet, as a King, And to our view what's future do thou bring. So mortals still in wantonness will gibe The Christ—his presence and his power deride. They ask--why are not miracles still perform'd, And thus the doctrine of the cross confirm'd? Were we to see the wonders that were done, (Per gospel statement,) by St. Mary's Son, We would believe him to be the Messiah, The child, the God, or any being higher! No miracle, they say, that we've not seen, Can be to us a proof of any thing. If thus repeated, canst thou not see, O. fool!

'Twould be but common law in nature's school. Others declare—that miracles, when done, And well attested as each scripture one, Are good as if seen our credence to engage, And truly miracles to every age: That God designed them to be rational proof For saving credence in the word of truth. Thus mad together they exceeding err, Know not what they say or whereof aver; 'Till both at last, beneath Satanic spell, Have their eyes open'd in the flames of hell. Albeit e'en then the former still may cry, (As Dives when in hell he lifted up his eye,) We speak the truth and Abraham's is the lie; No!—miracles were ne'er design'd to give, That faith by which the elect of God all live! That is the product of the Spirit's power! Who have it own the God-head of the doer! As preaching, so miracles, may or may not be, The means of faith—as may be God's decree. And now they bring the lowly Jesus forth, To Jews and Gentiles he's made food for mirth. Genius of Arminianism! here you see Thyself in true, though faint, epitome! Thou Christ exaltest to be Zion's King, Call him the Saviour—profess to worship him: Give him a throne in heaven as the head, Of every throne, and judge of quick and dead. Robe him in royalty, a sceptre give, And cry-hail! Jesus-mighty monarch live! Thou call'st all heaven, and earth, and hell, to view, The matchless honours which to Christ you do: And yet thou sayest—the king may reign alone! HAS LOST HIS SUBJECTS AND MAY LOSE EACH ONE! The King—the crown, the robe and sceptre be In heaven itself but solemn mockery!! If thou possess a true and heavenly sight, Then Herod and his soldiers acted right; And of salvation's end but gave a type! Thy doctrine is (from every caveat free) Subjects for Christ's kingdom may or may not be! And dost thou think, thou soul delusive sprite, That Christ is like thee or as some bedlamite; Who in his frenzy, and with maniac glee, Dubs himself King and struts right royally! Back, back, retire to thy dark abode, For when you worship you blaspheme your God! Once more for Christ did Pilate intercede In vain—the victim now submissively must bleed: The hour ordain'd of God for him to die Was come—the multitude now furious cry, Away with him—the blasphemer crucify. What! saith Pilate, crucify your King? Again they cry, away, away with him; We have no King but Cæsar, him we'll serve; His kingdom strengthen and his laws preserve. Thus Jews of old, in enmity to Christ, Would own a heathen for prophet, king, or priest; Profess to love, esteem, or be content, With Cæsar's worship, or his government. Genius of Arminianism!-again you see Thyself in bold relief of subtlety. The world, you own, in sin and darkness lies, Gulph'd in delusion, toss'd in vanities, In heart dire enmity to Israel's God, Perverting truth to lies of endless brood. Such you declare, (at least when politic you find,) To be the character of all mankind! Yet for your gospel's warrant, and defence, You summon that world's feelings and its sense, Flatter its head and heart and reasoning powers, And boast---these allies prove that truth is ours. Again—whene'er a certain gospel's named, In which free grace's doctrine is proclaim'd, How dost thou then salute the world, thy friend, Its feelings and its reas'ning powers commend; Dilate with passion and indignant cry, "Salvation of the Lord!"—'tis all a lie! The doctrine will not stand e'en reason's glance, That reason says—"God gives all men a chance." God has done his part, we must now do ours. So testifies the world's great reas'ning powers. Thus dost thou, spirit of delusion, still Flatter, like the serpent—and like him to kill! The pride-swoln world applauds your zeal and sense, Though all just standard prove you ignorance. So Herod and Pilate too were once made friends, Their friendship in violence on Jesus ends.

Arminians, now the world's false frendship woo, Its end is violence on Jesus too! How, violence on Jesus! some will cry-They slander his saints and call his truth a lie! Whoe'er's an enemy to them or this, Christ has proclaim'd, are enemies of his! Nor may we forget, thou Genius, here to tell, The friendship of the world 's the road to hell! How comes it, then, the world and you agree? You say, "do and live"—and so, it says, "do we!" The principle 's the same, the difference lays In this-you claim but half, they all the praise. How comes it, then, (if heart to heart agree, As face answers face upon the glassy sea!) That that world's heart and head, and all its powers, (Your mantle off,) agree exact with yours? It proves the world 's in grace as well as you, Or if in darkness, you're in darkness too!!* And now the cross on Christ the soldiers lay, And without the camp they hurry him away To Gabbatha, on summit of a hill, The measure of sin and suffering there to fill. As a lamb to the slaughter, Christ is led, Or as a sheep is dumb, he bow'd his head. In frantic mirth and fierce, revengeful blood, They stretch their victim on the fatal wood; Through feet and hands they drive the rugged nails, While life's soft chord in agonizing quails: Then raise the cross and surge it in the ground, And make the earth with demon shouts resound. Expiring with him, (one on either side,) Two malefactors were—e'en these deride The suffering Jesus—tauntingly they cry, Thou boasted Saviour! wherefore dost thou die? Canst thou save others! make that power known, Save us from death, and from thy cross come down!

^{*} To say the best of this detestable system, it makes a'lits abettors and teachers continually lie for God—continually makes the scriptures contradict themselves. So that we may as rationally look for truth and sincerity among its professors, as for nutriment in a serpent's fang—or expect to meet with Leviathan in a mudpuddle, as an able, evangelical minister among them! They are, for the most part, if not altogether, children of nature,—at best whitened sepulchres, not the less offensive, because more deceitful than the world generally.

The multitude these tauntings now prolong, As they recede or to the cross they throng. Hark! what sound was that? it came from heaven's abode. Was it the curse and terrors of a God? That piercing light! was it consuming fire, The flame of justice, God's avenging ire? Where did it reach? what rebel did it strike? Or sink to tophet, or translate to light? Blaspheming robber, testify—thou can: Thou art the object, thou the favour'd man. That sound was mercy's penetrating voice, To thy dead soul—Jehovah's sov'reign choice! That light, the day-spring sent thee from on high To shew that path unknown to vulture's eye, Consume thy sins, and raise thee to the sky. O glorious scene! O nobly awful proof! And illustration of that blessed truth, "Esau I've hated—Israel still I love." That sinks to hell---this reigns with me above! In burning pangs the Saviour cries—I thirst! Then rush his foes, each eager to be first, To give him drink—'twas vinegar and gall! Our nature's morale, since our nature's fall! Jesus receiv'd it from the insulting host, He bow'd his head, and giving up the ghost, He cried-" 'TIS FINISH'D"! creation's groan replied, 'Tis finish'd—the incarnate God has died! "Tis finish'd—ye heavens, and thou profoundest hell, The import of those words ye ne'er can tell; 'Tis thine, O Zion, only, to express, The grace, the glory, and the righteousness, f Of those vast words-eternal ages roll, That thou may'st learn and manifest the whole. On summit of the everlasting hills (Where peace and glory all thy border fills) Thou sit'st enthroned in joys immensely high, While day and night incessantly you cry; 'TIS FINISH'D—the counsel is fulfill'd! The counsel of peace, to Israel long reveal'd. Now we behold with what vast import fraught, Was all in providence, and by prophets taught To Jacob's tribes—in Abraham they were chose, A peculiar nation, and a Type of those, Elect in Christ before the world began, And shadow forth salvation's sov'reign plan.

In Abraham chosen, they heard Jehovah's call, Hearing, obey'd—forsook the world, and all Their former life: become Jehovah's charge, Who multiplies them and their tents enlarge. Egypt ALLURES them to her fruitful soil, Transforms them slaves, and makes them grown with toil:

Jehovah's ear is open to their cry,
He measures their tears, and listens to each sigh,
Till in due time, and BY Almighty hand,
They're brought from Egypt to the promised land.
All this but shadows the redemption given
By Jesus' death, to destined heirs of heaven.
They too by eye omniscient are ceaseless sought,
And by God's power from sin's foul bondage brought.
The paschal lamb—the moving pillar too,
(As fire and cloud) that led the Hebrews through
Their fitful journey—were but types of Him
Who atones and leads his people from their sin.
The bread from heaven—the gushing streams that flow'd

From Horeb's rock, (by miracle bestowed,) As all the forms and rites to Israel given, Or led by promise, or by judgment driven: All, all, prefigure, and as types set forth, Immanuel's glories and his matchless worth, And how he saves his church from south to north. Types are finish'p-his providence he hides, But still he gathers and securely guides. 'TIS FINISH'D--all that holy men of old, Mov'd by the Spirit, of the Christ foretold. The woman's seed has bruised the serpent's head, The Shiloh has come, obey'd, endured and bled. The prophet, like to Moses, has appeared, The world despised him and his saints revered. The Holy One of God-the undefiled, The Gentiles scoff and Judea has reviled. The ransom's given—shout, O earth o'er it! Deliverance now is found from hell's dire pit. The Desire of all nations now to man has come, True peace and happiness are in him alone, For which all nations seek and sigh and groan. The Righteous branch, the plant of great renown, In fruitfulness and healing virtue 's come;

Jehovah's corner-stone, the tried and elect, As the foundation, in God's Zion's set. The light of Gentiles, glory of Israel's race, Has come in fulness of his truth and grace. The Holy One of God, as leaven, appears, To purge from sin each of his glory's heirs. THE MESSENGER of the covenant has come: A refiner's fire is that heavenly One! The Ransom, Surety-all in all is given, Of prophecies and promises of heaven! 'TIS FINISH'D-God's holy law is magnified, By his obedience it is satisfied. Thus saith that law—a foolish thought is sin! One foolish thought was never found in him. That law each moment claims for God the heart! One moment Christ from this did ne'er depart. That law demands that man his neighbor love, As his own life, and that each mortal prove, In word and act, that he does to man the same That he would have others do to him again. Christ was made man, and he his neighbor loved, As his own soul, and in his life he proved, He did to all, all that the law had claim'd, And thus the honors of that law maintain'd. What Jesus was in his life's righteousness Each man must be or die, without his GRACE. One jot or tittle of default in man, Involves the curse, and will the sinner damn. "TIS FINISH'D—the great atonement now is made, Forever perfected are those who're saved! Jehovah incarnate—the Lamb of God has died. And perfects all the Father sanctified.* O what a scene! from Edom see him come. Roll'd in his blood is God's eternal Son! Glorious his apparel, travelling in his might: Thou universe! behold the nameless sight. O Son of God! wherefore art thou red, In thine apparel, as are those who tread The crimson wine vat?--let us hear THEE tell, Why thou beneath the monster death hast fell. "I've trod the wine press of Jehovah's wrath, The fountain's opened—fill'd is now the bath

^{*} Or set apart.-Jude i.

Of blood divine-on my holy soul there fell Jehovah's vengeance and my people's hell!* The sword awoke!—My Father drew the blade, Its gleaming terrors made all heaven afraid: I saw its vengeance, aghast my spirit stood, That sword oracular cried for my blood! My Father's hand then raised the blade on high, And to my groans he thunder'd this reply: The day of fierce vengeance to thy soul is come, I must bring the ransom'd of THE COVENANT home! Thus saying, in fury through my heart he smote, Convulsive throes succeed the awful stroke: He saw my sorrows—then Himself withdrew, And Tophet's horrors round my spirit grew. I roar'd, my God! hast thou forsook me too? O there was wo! the deepest ever felt; O there was a curse! the fiercest ever dealt Or in hell or earth—God from his Christ depart! Such pangs will ne'er convulse another heart! My saints on earth, at times a shade endure Of that deep wo, when horror-struck they roar I'm lost! Pve lost the God my powers adore. Billows of wrath in burning terrents roll, And hell's fierce pains transfix my struggling soul; To the last dregs sin's nameless curse I drunk, And to the power of the grave then sunk. FOR the transgression of my people, I Was doom'd to suffer, and compell'd to die,

^{*} Of all the fanciful ideas of fanciful Divines, that of the abstract dignity of the person of Jesus, giving value, infinite value, to the atonement of Christ, is certainly one of the most artful, if not one of the most funciful of their Futher's suggestions. The design of the Devil, in raising up such an idea in the Baptist society, was to get, if possible, an accommodation on the part of that society to Armi-The Baptist society is to preach the atonement of Christ from his infinite dignity as of infinite value, and such as might save all men! Well, if the Devil gets them (as he has got multitudes of them) to preach that, then he has the avowed Arminians (the others are but disguised ones) to preach its general application, and to tell the world that even the Baptists admit it of unbounded efficacy! But that is not the worst of those wretched Fullerite sentiments. They represent to us that the death of Christ would have been of just as much value, (from the infinite dignity of his person,) if he had died in a gentle slumber, as it is after all the pangs he endured. O, what a reflection upon Jehovah? What an insult to Christ!

On me their countless mountain sins were laid, Their HELL I suffered that they might be saved. The flock the Shepherd ransom'd with his blood, His death 's their life, his flesh is made their food. My church is purchas'd with the blood of God! Of the possession who shall him defraud!! False, blasphemous, will hell and earth proclaim, Another doctrine in my sacred name: Some will dare to teach, for devils I atone, And in the end will raise them to my throne! Others declare for every man I died, And with salvation have the world supplied: That for the salvation flowing through my blood All have a chance, if they will make it good.* To cap the climax of the absurd and lies, A host will cry, for all men Jesus dies; The atonement's general, specially applied! Hell gets a part of them for whom I died! This doctrine too shall turn e'en Israel's brain, They'll hail its authors with a loud acclaim, Greet them as Doctors, matchless reas'ning men, The honor of my church, and giants of the pen! Their eclat shall cause a thousand more to rise From maggot state, to be pestiferous flies, Swarming through Zion brooding endless lies. What may not follow! when vain men affirm, Within my earthly courts, that thus they learn Of my bless'd gospel---when their ridiculous fame Is wafted o'er the earth for lying in my name. The Father and the Son atonement makes For all mankind! But the holy spirit takes And specially applies! Jehovah's then Divided in counsel and in saving men!! This shall be call'd reason of the highest grade! Satan its sire---his creature Doctor made. Others will make mutable --- my blood of nought, And give to hell-fire whom from hell I bought! My Father's justice infamously impugn, And blasphemous teach, he has deceived his Son! Has triffed with his blood and that in vain, Humbled me to death transfixed with hell's pain.

^{*} This is something like as if blind Bartimeus had said to Christ —Lord put in one eye and I will put in the other!

Others, maniac-like, will through the nations run, And thus proclaim-" Whoever loves God's Son For what to them HE is* or for them has done, Into his kingdom they shall never come! Then seizing water and a flaming brand, Frantic they'll cry with each of these in hand, We'll quench hell's flames--the heavens we will burn, That selfish man henceforth may live and learn To love Immanuel for himself alone, And not for what he'll do, or ever yet has done To save our souls, to have our sins forgiven, To cleanse our hearts or make us heirs of heaven! † But ye, my saints, who reign with me on high, Perceive the doctrine is an awful lie! That by one offering of myself I save, My chosen ones from hell and sin's foul grave! 'TIS FINISH'D .- HUMAN nature is display'd, In all the turpitude of which 'tis made, The heart's deep enmity to God is seen, (Albeit but visible what has ever been, Since Adam's fall,) nor are the outward best Of human kind, of better hearts possess'd. Who different think, do but themselves delude, And by false standard deem themselves the good. The scriptures and philosophy declare, That, as the tree, the various branches are; That every creature its likeness must forth bring, Of course the sinner one conceived in sin. Let then self-righteous men this act survey, And learn that all are demon-like as they, Who rush'd infuriate on the peerless good; Slaughter'd Immanuel, trampling on his blood! At this dire scene the sun refused his light, The heavens were shrouded in a tenfold night, The souls of saints in gloom are shrouded o'er, Nature convulsive trembles through each pore!

^{*} i. e. Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redeinption.
† This sentiment is the soul of Hopkinsianism! A woman was the originator of this sentiment—barefooted and with disshevelled hair she walked the streets of Alexandria, with a torch in one hand and pitcher of water in the other, and exclaimed as above! This infamous sentiment is very prevalent in the New-England states;
we have recently got some of it from there in this western Metropolis!

The rocks are rent, the graves wide open flung, And stamp the deed the foulest ever done! SUCH IMPORT to immanuel's dying words, The church in heaven or on earth affords: While all united cry—O ye heavens shout! Rejoice, O earth! Zion, let your praises out! Break forth into singing, O ye mountains high, Ye forests and each tree join in the cry: Shout al!!—The Lord for Jacob's seed hath died, In Israel's salvation he is glorified!

RESURRECTION, RE-APPEARANCE,

AND

CHRIST TO HIS DISCIPLES.

Three days within the tomb did Christ repose, Guarded and watch'd by his inveterate foes: The Sabbath ended, the morning now arrives, When God commanded the Son of Man to rise. The Christ awakes---omnific he exclaims, O death, I am thy plagues! I'll burst thy chains! Thy destruction will I be, O boasting grave, And prove my arm omnipotent to save! Thus saying, in the power of a God, Invisible, he left his dark abode! Obedient clouds his glorious form infold, From mortal sight his presence they withhold: Around him gather heaven's adoring host, In unbreath'd ecstacies their songs are lost: They gaze upon him, bow in sacred awe---Scarce could they feel that real which now they saw.

From soul to soul the gentlest murmurs ran, Hail! mighty God! all hail! the glorious man! Here we would lie, here wonder and adore, Eternal muse—nor ask a heaven more. Meanwhile disciples at the grave appeared, With fragrant spices, piously prepared, To embalm the body of their precious Lord, And their last act of faithfulness afford. The grave is open! roll'd away the stone, The Saviour's risen—the blessed object's gone! The tomb they enter-every part explore-But seek, in vain, the object they adore. While fill'd with wonder, and with grief oppress'd, Two radiant forms appear'd and them address'd. "Why seek ye, mortals, 'mong the sleeping dead, The Lord of life and Zion's living head! Why not remember what he said to you, How he must suffer, and what he must do: The Son of Man by sinful man must die, And rise again, to reign with God on high. So spake Messiah, while yet in Galilee, And this the time that those great things should be." The disciples heard, and then remember'd well, From lips of Christ such promises had fell. They quick return, with boundless joy possess'd, And the great scene make known to all the rest. Peter rush'd forth to the vacated grave, Of the event full evidence to have: He came-he saw, and wondering did recede, And testified that Christ had risen indeed. Two of the disciples, the same day, went forth, To Emmaus—of Judea's cities north— And as they journey, they beguile their walk, While Christ they speak of, and his hist'ry talk. Their hopes, their joys, in him had almost fled, Since he was numbered with the silent dead. While they thus commune--and mutual sympathize, Lo! one appears, who fills them with surprise. He asks the subject of their colloquy, Receives their answer, and makes this reply. O fools and slow of heart, are ye to quote All that the prophets of Messias wrote. Ought not Christ to have suffered all these things,

And rise to his glory as the King of Kings?* And then beginning with what Moses penned, He expounded the Scriptures 'till the prophets' end. Their heaving breasts with sacred rapture thrill'd To see in Christ those prophecies fulfill'd: And when he left them they together cry--What floods of light! our ecstacies, how high! While HE unfolded to our wond'ring souls, Jehovah's promises, which none controls! How dark our minds-O how blind were we, Thus long to live, nor this connexion see! Jehovah prophesied that Christ should come, He has appear'd, and heaven's pleasure done. And O! what joy does the great thought convey, That Jesus Christ, the life, the truth, the way, Shall (all, all the prophecies of God engage!) Possess in heaven a ransom'd heritage!! Genius of Arminianism! what say'st thou? God may, or not, fulfil his word-his vow! Ergo-God prophesied that Christ should come, The event might or might not have been done! God prophesies that Christ shall have a seed, Albeit that promise is not to be believed! To thee we say--avaunt, thou impious fool, Nor more profess thou'rt taught in Jesus' school. HE says--all things the prophets spake of him, Must be fulfill'd---till the last stone's brought in, Of GRACE's edifice --- not one tittle fails, Or as HE lives or his great power prevails. O Zion! shout---the glorious truth rehearse! God has proclaim'd, through the wide universe, The counsel of the Lord shall ceaseless stand, His will be done through earth's remotest land; THE RANSOM'D OF THE LORD SHALL RETURN TO HIM. On Zion's hill, and own him for their King: Songs fill their lips, while round them glork SPREADS!

And EVERLASTING JOY SHALL CROWN THEIR HEADS! Once more Immanuel to his saints appears,

^{*} What that system is, in the sight of heaven, or in value to the soul, which makes all the prophecy and promise of God pure nihility, we may want a term suitably to express. But such a system is Arminianism!—making the word of God of none effect—giving the lie essentially to the whole of it.

To cheer their hearts and banish all their fears, To give them counsel---ordain and to command, The MEANS of grace---to Jew and Gentile's land. Go ye, said Jesus, into all the world (My name's the banner that must be unfurl'd) And preach MY GOSPEL—at your peril dare Proclaim another, than what I declare! The whole counsel of Jehovah make ye known: How holy—glorious—sovereign is his throne. Proclaim the kingdom of your God's at hand; Exhort attention, or the same command: THE KINGDOM OF GOD! its rise in sov'reign

A past eternity its bless'd birth-place!
THE KINGDOM OF GOD—in Jehovah plann'd,
By Father, Son, and Spirit duly scann'd;
Just in its principles, secure its end,
Jehovah's glory, and the sinner's friend.
THE KINGDOM OF GOD! ordain'd in worlds

above To embrace the objects of electing love, And God's great purpose in his Christ to prove. THE KINGDOM OF GOD! in providence convey'd To every soul ordained to be saved; My Spirit, agent-instrument, my Word: Ye HEAVENS! witness—"Salvation's of the Lord." THE KINGDOM OF GOD! establish'd in the heart, Repentance and faith the gifts it does impart: In GRACE 'tis founded in the human soul And glory's vision consummates the whole! Preach ye this gospel—loud these truths proclaim, They'll prove a blessing in Jehovah's name. Though men despise it—pharisees abhor, Such is the gospel that shall be the power Of God to life—preach that—on me repose, I'll save you from its fierce and subtle foes, And by it save them whom Jehovah chose. Yea, more—I'll make it music to the ears, Of all my saints—a cordial for their fears. By it they shall grow in knowledge and in grace, And as a river they shall find their peace. Such is MY Gospel-such shall be the end. Who preach another—their labour vainly spend. Ealse Christs, false prophets, and false gospels too, Shall soon appear, and last all ages through. They'll suppress the doctrine of my sov'reign grace, Afraid of contumely from their fallen race: Some indistinct, time-serving scraps they'll preach, Of my deep counsel which the scriptures teach. Provoke each other in base sophistries, And for my gospel substitute their lies. Audacious, they will, virtually, proclaim, Much of the scripture is reveal'd in vain! In wild, unceasing effort they will try, By making proselytes, to multiply, And for their works each other Deify. The means I ordain'd reject—in their own boast: More wise, more gracious, than the Holy Ghost,* All, in my name, will loud profess to be My zealous servants cloth'd in charity! Some say the Spirit has too much reveal'd, That all those doctrines should have been conceal'd Which men, by reason taught, indignant hate, Or, most professors cannot tolerate! Others will admit all scripture to be good, If in the hands of the great D. D. brood: That they must interpret, and so much dispense As may not shock man's feelings or insult his sense! That their vast wisdom must the case control, Lest scripture corrupt and damn the human soul!

* It is a very general idea among professors, at this day, that only some part of the scripture doctrine may be safely preached: such as repentance and faith; that the rest is too mysterious and will do no good if preached upon! Now such sentiment implies—

1. An infamous reflection upon the wisdom of the Holy Ghost:

and is a direct lie to the word of God.—(See 2 Tim. 3: 16.)

2. It betrays an ignorance of what the repentance and faith of God's elect are, for there is as much mystery in the source and nature of that repentance and faith as there is in any thing revealed in the scriptures.

3. It is a virtual acknowledgment to the Dagon of Arminianism that the doctrine of sovereign grace is bud, consequently false.

4. That those who preach upon this principle, are ignorant or knavish Arminians, who want to get and keep a congregation together, that they may keep themselves by the fleece thereof.

Those that act so, as professed Calvinists, are ripe for any measure of treason against the truth that hell may bribe them to.

Declare the whole counsel of God!! the doctrine of Jehovah's sovereignty is as likely to be blessed by the Holy Chost to salvation, as that of repentance!

Ten thousand will have their pious labors bless'd When they make some scripture contradict the rest! On this their systems and their souls will stand. Those fly like chaff-these fall-forever damn'd! Of such are those who spurn my rightcousness, Insult my elect, rob'd in the glorious dress: Who on their LEGAL IDOL shreds of scripture hang, And cry—behold salvation's glorious plan! The world will see, and seeing, hail it's own, And of the idol worshippers become. Then shout the host-O what a proof is given, Ours is the gate, and ours the way to heaven! Again-more general shall my gospel be An off'ring at the shrine of man's cupidity. My truth be valued by measure and by weight, (And hell unnumbered purchasers will make) That inch of truth, in common courtesy, To span of interest ever should give way: For ounce of lie, no liberal man e'er thought, That pound of gain is not most cheaply bought! That truth suppress'd for peace' sake, all may see, Is emanation of heaven's bright charity! † A multitude, while their Father's fire burns,

The author has, in every direction, found an exemplification of this among the Arminians: So that when one or another of the truths of the gospel have been luminously discussed and supported by the whole tenor of divine revelation, and the "lying Spirit" itself began to blush, then if one scrap of scripture was suggested, apparently opposing the doctrine of grace, the welkin rang with a "bless God—glory to God," &c.—and for what? Why for making it appear that God's own word contradicts itself! And when a scrap of scripture cannot be found by them for such a purpose, and in such a case, they will make one of their fraternity a class-leader or a bishop, who will belch out lustily an anathema against the doctrine in such cases of their extremity. There is more demoniac glee among the Arminians in exhibiting or attempting to exhibit God a liar, than the devil himself ever manifested.

† Charity! heaven born Charity! how art thou disguised, perverted, and abused, by ignorance and knavery. God ordains one only, and grand instrument, to save sinners and bless his Church, and that is, his Gospel in all its doctrine, precept and promise! And ministers (so called) and churches (so called) exalt themselves to heaven for liberality, prunence and charity, because they suppress the greater part of the doctrine of that Gospel! Ye hypocrites, yo generation of vipers, God will find you out in all the meanderings of your Proteus existence.

Shall zealous cry—The gospel gives the terms And conditions, upon which all men may live And these are they—repent and Christ believe! Who have with these conditions well complied They will be saved, though Christ for them ne'er died! Others will tell how Christ and all heaven weep Because all men will not become his sheep:* And others declare (and chill e'en devils' blood) Sinners reject the gospel—and thus stab their God!† Transfix his breast with agonizing pain, O'erwheim his face with disappointment's shame! The truth is this-my gospel loud proclaims, To give repentance and faith the Saviour reigns. These fools know not -- 'tis my sov'reign instrument To make my people truly penitent; And to their souls the "election's" faith convey, Which faith shall end in heaven's immortal day. For them the pages of my sacred word, Exhortations, precepts, and commands afford---'Tis by the foolishness of preaching them, God shews his sov'reign power in saving men! Man is condemn'd already---e'er the gospel came! And thus of him the words of God proclaim: If he believe not---condemned he'll still remain! If he believe not, then full proof is given He ne'er was chosen to be heir of heaven! I

Nide the Editor of the "Columbian Star," who is wont to say in his sermonizing, that "Jesus Christ in heaven is weeping over sinners because they wont repent and be saved!"

† Vide The Baptist Minister (so called) of the Pittsburgh church, who says in his sermonizing—"The very bosom of God is stabbed by sinners in their rejection of the gospel."—The stabbing, I suppose, is to account for the weeping: What a ghastly looking object their God must be by this time! Juggurnaut must be a very Apollo himself compared with their God!

‡ Again we repeat that not exercising evangelical faith in Christ, does not make men guilty—it is not the cause of their final condemnation: But the want of that faith leaves them guilty, leaves them condemned—leaves them in a state of nature, leaves them where they fell to in Adam's transgression, and where God designed they should remain! For those who pretend to preach salvation by grace, for them to hold such a sentiment, is a most gross inconsistency: And yet, alas! how many professed Calvinist ministers do it! But the cause of this inconsistency is most obvious—to wit: by making it the moral duty of all men to believe, they make it the moral duty of all men to support a ministry as the means by which they

My kingdom some will fancy born with them, And some will make it in the power of men. Some disconnect the spirit and the word, Yet claim the kingdom and salute me Lord! The Spirit's work some will dare deride, And in the letter lawlessly confide: Profess, that reason and the letter give, That faith, which my elect from God receive. Nor aught so base, so false, so full of sin. But what the world will own and glory in More than my kingdom --- which I bid you preach, And Jew and Gentile the great doctrine teach. But fear ve not --- though few may follow you: Remember God is to his cov'nant true. That all he has given me shall surely live, And by MY GOSPEL too they shall believe! That gospel preach'd to Adam's fallen race, In its deep counsel and its sov'reign grace, Shall determine who the truth receive, Or who in its form or in its power live! Was MY GOSPEL preach'd --- my counsel thus made known.

My church on earth would not (instead of stone!)
Be heap'd with rubbish---stubble, hay, and wood, are to believe; and they also make it the moral duty of man, woman and child to fill up their meeting houses and make them out respectable congregations: But the truth and the divine commission is, "go, preach my gospel," not as the moral duty of all men to believe, but as the simple (and to the world foolish) means of giving unto the elect repentance and faith! It is the instrument of salvation to the church, not a moral obligation to the world!!

This doctrine of its being the moral duty of all men to exercise evangelical faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, reduces many of our professed Calvinistic ministers to such a degree of self contradiction in their preaching that it is difficult to say whether pity for them or contempt for their heresy prevails: They say with one breath—Evangelical repentance and faith are part of the riches of grace treasured up in Christ Jesus for the church! With the next breath they say that it is the moral duty of the world to make provision for its own salvation, from the ruins of the fall, exactly equal to all that Almighty God could make in the man Christ Jesus! That man's sin is not because he has made himself unholy, but because he wont make himself holy! not because he has fallen to hell, but because he wont raise himself to heaven!

Such palpable self-contradiction proclaims the presence of Arminianism, or theological knavery! hatred of the truth, or love of the waves!

While men blasphemous call it work of God!* And then no sinecure would Zion prove, For those who the wages of the unrighteous love. No more the arena for ambition's pranks, Where every Judas gets a world's loud thanks. No more would man in learning's tinsell'd dress, Or of my gospel, or in my name profess To flutter o'er the heads of gaping fools, In babel's chatter or in heathen's schools. 'Midst all this scene forever I will raise, Bold champions of my cross—whose mortal days -Shall all be consecrated hell to dare, And my great kingdom fearlessly declare. Thus Christ commanded, then to Peter said, Simeon!—you see me risen from the dead: I am now to leave you and my little fold, I have lov'd, and love them, in a love ne'er told: While still I linger on this wo worn earth, My bowels yearn o'er them of grace's birth. Thou lovest me! do thou that love now prove, By serving them whom I eternal love. Feed, feed my sheep, my lambs with milk supply, Thou shalt live for them, for them too thou shalt die! They drink one fountain, and they eat one bread, Pursue one way, are by one Spirit led;

1. That mankind esteem the gospel of Christ now as they did from the lips of Jesus!

2. That no talent, no piety will exempt them from the same calumny that Christ endured.

3. They will learn how hideously vast is the difference between what men have got together as the Church of Christ, and the real, essential Church.

4. They will learn that the particular providence of God is as necessary to prevent them from starving in this day of overflowing charity, as it was in the prophet Elijah's!

^{*} There are very many ministers calling themselves Calvinists!—Or, believing that the grace of God is sovereign, discriminating and confined to the elect: and that the providence of God will bring forth and sustain a ministry for carrying into effect his purposes of grace! this they are in their creed by profession: now only let them abandon all meritricious means of keeping up the appearance of a visible church, and let them simply preach the doctrine of grace, without guile or hesitancy, and throw themselves upon the arms of a special providence—let them do this, according to the genius of the calvinistic faith, and they will learn—as sure as souls are in their bodies.

In every age, in every clime the same, They REST and GLORY only in my name! Give them the milk, the bread and the strong meat, That's all they hunger for and all they'll eat. Nor yet fastidious will my people feed Or ask who bring it-canst thou Hebrew read? The hungry care not, if the food be good, If it be serv'd on porcelain or on wood.* Albeit my sheep essentially deem, That servant and dish, respectively, be clean. Chaff, husks and rinds demand a golden plate, (The latter will much appetite create.) Full flowing periods, nature's rhetoric, Pathetic tales and stage stirring trick,† Will be the wisdom and the power of men, To make my gospel merchandise and gain. In wisdom's semblance they will loud profess, To clothe my gospel in scientific dress; Bow to the world, and cry in loud acclaim, Behold our religion by your science reign! The world in court'sv the flattery will return, And thousands for office in their gospel burn;

* Nothing is a more certain evidence of secret enmity to the truth than when professors thereof find fault with the mere manner of address of those who preach it—such persons may be set down at once as Iscariots!

† This telling of old wives' fables in the pulpit gives many ministers all their consequence: Hence we hear from the pulpit that all modern improvements in the arts and sciences—such as steam boats, canals, railways, turnpikes, bridges, balloons, &c. &c. are all in preparation for the Lord when he comes in the latter day glory; that he will take it all from the world and give it to his people, especially those that are Baptists! Who, then, would not be on the Lord's side? Who wont contribute to making a revival for the Lord? Who wont join his church, especially the Baptist society, who is to have Benjamin's portion! Indeed, Mr. B. this may be said to be "good news from a far country." How deep your researches into the scriptures are! What new things you bring out! 'Tis high time your M. A. was changed into a D. D. for nothing but the erudition of a Doctor could have made you thus knowing! Quere—If the world would not be, upon the authority of Grotius, Puffendorff, or any other international law writer, justified in making the church now meet the expenses of these improvements? Are you learned enough, Mr. B. to answer this! at least, are you not afraid of it?

* Vide Col. Star-and verily it is true, their religion reigns by the science, i. e. policy of this world!

That world will feed them, clothe them, dub them wise;

Strange phantasies shall o'er their visions rise; 'Till they at last shall, self-deceived, conclude, That Zion has Changed Habiliments and food! That what feeds my church at dawn of gospel day, Has at last become as thistles or as hav. Who differ from them (in the truth's defence) They'll class with oxen, as to zeal or sense, Proclaim them stupid—illiberal, unkind, And of their wond rous signs profoundly blind! Thev'll multiply their heralds, woo all men, And by their standard, judge, approve, condemn.* Against my pastors anathemas be hurl'd, By countless professors and a kindred world; 'Till in the end, and when again I come, The faith of my elect shall scarce be known! But Simeon, in you I have exemplified, That truth which hell and earth shall thus deride. I call'd, I quicken'd, and your soul I fed, I kept, I counsell'd and have safely led Your wandering feet:—e'en when you denied Your Lord and Master, still for you he cried. At mercy's throne—for you he intercedes; The Priest must pray for all for whom he bleeds! Then go thou forth and all life's journey through, Proclaim that grace which has appear'd in you.

^{*} Here the author means to be understood as saying:—That our Fullerite Baptists get up some meeting-house, college, theological school, or missionary project, and those that do not aid them are marked as the objects of their covert inuendoes, or open flings, if they may dare attempt the latter. Under the primiership of an appropriate Doctor, and the agency of one of Asia's converts to Baptism, (tho' not a tawny one,) the above doings have been carried to an extent, in the name of the Baptist society, that is without precedent in the history of the Baptist church in America. was there a society that exhibited greater credulity in the professions of two ecclesiastical aspirants, and never was a society made to bleed in reputation more than they have done for that credulity. The bubble is now bursting—the whole of their vast edifice is tottering-college, school, "Star," and all are sinking into merited oblivion: 200,000 dollars, at least, have they, first and last, defrauded orphan and widow, friends, brethren, honest laborers and mechanics, out of, to make their religious Demonstration. In doing this, they have given a practical illustration of "Fuller's gospel"!! O how worthy of all acceptation! and imitation too!

I'll raise up others, who shall well maintain
The glorious gospel you are to proclaim.
However foolish to the world it be,
Or high it raise their carnal enmity;
However treach'rous professors too may prove
To MY bless'd gospel, which they seem to love;
It is the truth, to all eternity!
It is the truth, and shall my people free
From hell and sin: the hungry it shall feed,
And staunch all wounds with which my saints may bleed!

Tell ye my people, that a God of love, Beholds them from his glorious throne above With pitying eye—his bowels o'er them yearn, And underneath them 's his eternal arm. Tell them, thus saith the High and Lofty One, Who on rolling worlds wheels his eternal throne; To this man I'll look, with complacent delight, E'en to him who mourneth with a heart contrite. The smoking flax I never will forsake, The bruised reed my power shall never break: That sweeter music to my ear's their GROANS, Than song and lyre of all angelic thrones! And those, ungrateful, who backslide from me, (A lasting monument is found in thee!) Their sins I'll visit with chastisement's rod, But still will be their loving, faithful God. Tell them their sorrow now will not compare With that great weight of glory to which they are heir: That having loved them, I will love them still, And give them grace to endure and do my will: Nor height, nor depth, things present, or to come, Nor life, nor death, shall separate them from My intercessions, and my Father's love, Or rob them of their inheritance above. That all the attributes of God engage, To save them from sin, and Satan's subtle rage: God's power, his wisdom, faithfulness and truth, His justice, mercy, promises and oath, United stand, to make salvation sure, While heaven shall last, or God himself endure. Thus teach my saints Jehovah's love to know, Thus comfort, comfort, them while here below:

And as they learn what mercy is bestow'd, What sin forgiven through God's incarnate blood; So will their love to the Jehovah rise, So will they live as fav'rites of the skies!

THE ASCENSION!

ADVENT OF THE HOLY GHOST;

AND

PREACHING OF THE APOSTLES.

Thus spake Messiah, while around him form'd A cloud of glory, ineffably adorn'd: It felt his mandate (inaudibly given) And bore its Maker for his native heaven. Midway from earth ten thousand angels meet The rising God! and his bless'd presence greet, As they ascend in worship at his feet. From heaven's empyreal confines, angel Thrones, Behold the object, and exclaim, Who comes! Who shall ascend from earth, sin's dark abode, Into the hill of an all-righteous God? What being from that world shall see the face Of our Jehovah in his holy place? Whoe'er he be, clean hands he must possess, Λ heart all pure, and spotless righteousness. Whose soul has ne'er been swoln in vanity, Or dealt with God or man deceitfully: He, and HE only, ever shall receive, The blessing which Jehovah has to give! That blessing is, eternal life and grace, To man's degenerate, wretched, ruin'd race! With trumpet tongue attendant hosts reply,

"Tis the Maker, monarch, Glory of the sky, Jehovah incarnate—the mighty Son, the child, The man—all holy, harmless, undefiled! Lift up your heads, ye gates of heaven, with joy, Let all within you every power employ, In song of welcome to the First and Last, Our future glory, as he has been our past. O, everlasting doors wide open fling, And let Jehovah's king of glory in. He's the Lord strong and mighty, terrible in fight, He has put the alien armies all to flight: Returns to heaven!—In him Jehovah boasts: The King of Glory and the Lord of Hosts! The gates spring up, the doors wide open fly; The cloud of glory sails resplendent by, To the eternal mountain of the Lord, By thrones saluted, and by thrones ador'd. Into the Holy place Immanuel flies, (Abode unpierced by created eyes,) At Jehovah's feet the holy Jesus stood, And spread HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS and SHEW'D HIS BLOOD!

The Almighty radiance smiled ineffably, And for this offering gracious did reply. Son of my love eternal! delight of my eyes, I hail thee welcome to thy native skies! A sweet smelling sacrifice to me thou hast brought, A glorious robe of righteousness hast wrought: Opened "a fountain" in thy Father's house, A cleansing fount for sov'reign grace's use! Delight of my eyes! thou darling of my soul! I'll give thee of glory, visible, the whole! Now go thou forth to my eternal hill, And there I'll utter my unutter'd will. Obedient, Christ recedes to where ordain'd, And thus the voice omnipotent proclaim'd: Hear, O ye heavens, O earth—all lands and sea, My righteous, and unalterable decree! This day I set on Zion's holy hill, My King of glory, and he SHALL fulfil My sov'reign pleasure—whate'er he asks of me, That I will give him through eternity. The heathen I will give for his inheritance, And earth's utmost bounds in saving penitence.

He shall bring his children to an holy birth, And daughters from the ends of the wide earth. Out of all nations, kindred, people, tongues, He shall redeem all Zion's chosen sons. His throne shall be an everlasting throne, To his dominion no limits shall be known, To him, I ordain, that every knee shall bow, Of thrones in heaven, and creatures too below. To him shall every mortal tongue confess, As Judge, the guilty—saints, as Truth and Grace. A day I've appointed in which the quick and dead Shall all be judged, by Christ the living head Of all that live. Ye heavens your homage give To him, in whom elect you only live! The obedient heavens move in immense desire Toward Zion's hill, cloth'd in devotion's fire: The just made perfect in the cov'nant's blood, Are first to worship the incarnate God. Thou art worthy, they cried, O Jesus, to receive, This throne, this power, all honor God can give; Blessing and glory to the great IAm, And thou Jehovah's sin-atoning Lamb. In thy own blood thou hast wash'd and made us white! Through thee, O Christ! we feel this glorious sight, And worship thee eternal, day and night. Ten thousand times ten thousand angels then, The matchless glories of the Lamb proclaim; They veil their faces with their golden wings, While heaven's vast concave with their anthem rings. Hail! holy, holy, holy, mighty Lord, The one Jehovah, and the sov'reign God; Who was, and is, and ever art to be One—Three in One, through all eternity! Thus Christ exalted to his heavenly throne, MUST send his glorious, blessed, Spirit down, To work salvation from the power of sin In every soul ordain'd to life in him! Eternal Spirit, said the Son of God, Descend to earth, and make my promise good. Thou see'st that people I've redeem'd from hell, How cloth'd in darkness, how deep in sin they're fell; Thou knowest each soul for whom I died and live, I WILL that thou to such salvation give. No power but thine, Eternal Spirit, can

Thus change and renovate the soul of man. Light came from darkness by thy power divine, Do thou into the souls of my elect now shine; Give them the light of th' knowledge of their God, That they may sink in dust and self abhorr'd, Thence be they rais'd to living faith in me, And let them feel my love in feeling thee: Then rest upon them all life's journey through, With heaven their spirits and their thoughts imbue; Provide them Pastors after my own heart, Who shall feel MY Gospel and its truth impart: From glory to glory do thou change each one, 'Till on earth my pleasure shall in them be done; And when below they have magnified my grace, As plants of my hand, and trees of righteousness, I'll transplant them to my paradise above, Where, in the full fruition of my love, They shall fragrant bloom in everlasting spring, And consummate the praise of Zion's King. The eternal Spirit leaves its high abode, In heaven's majestic energy it rode On mighty rushing winds—and entered where Christ's saints were met in hope and fervent prayer: The house is filled with the unseen power, And all proclaim the Godhead of the doer! Anon, that spirit is seen in tongues of fire, Which all their hearts with sacred awe inspire. Upon each disciple came a flaming tongue; (Emblem of Israel's new and living one,) Wrapp'd in amaze, in heaving wonder lost, Each soul o'erflowing with the Holy Ghost; Language mirac?lous to the saints is given, To preach the kingdom and the grace of heaven, Mong every nation, kindred, people, tongue, Where God ordain'd his sacred word should run. Amaz'd the enemies of Christ now stood, Though still they own'd not 'twas the power of God. To vulgar merriment themselves resign, And cry—these men are filled with new wine; Their brains are turn'd, their tongues know of no rule; Hence 'tis they chatter, and thus play the fool. The apostles rise—while Peter cries—forbear! . Ye impious men, and hear what I declare. God prophesied! (and he his word fulfils,)

And here is seen what holy Joel foretells: The Spirit of God's pour'd out upon all flesh, (Gentile and Jew mirac'lous tongues possess,) The unction of prophecy in our spirits burn! We preach the gospel, men of Israel learn! For God declares—who on Christ's name shall call, He shall be saved from human nature's fall. Ye men of Israel, hear ye then our words, The gospel that we preach, it is the Lord's! Jesus, as man, had all his life approved, By signs and miracles, as just and good. And now ye see a glorious sign is given, That whom you kill'd has from the dead arisen. By God's fixed counsel, and foreknowledge HE Was delivered to you, that all heaven might see How demoniac, dark, and infamous is man; And YET fulfil HIS sov'reign grace's plan! This Christ, exalted o'er heaven's highest host, Receives the promise, and gives the Holy Ghost; Which now ye see, in mighty works we've done, Which now ye hear, IN Jew and Gentile's tongue. As erst to Sinai came the Eternal Sire, The mountain quak'd, and shot terrific fire; Or, when the Son in human nature came, Exultant angels o'er Judea's shepherds flame; So, when the Spirit to the earth descends, Due signs and wonders the event attends! While thus the Spirit honor due receives, To us, as preachers, mirac'lous tongues it gives: That we to Gentiles may that truth proclaim, Which God ordains to life, through Jesus' name! Though we have tongues, are fill'd with prophecies, Possess all knowledge, fathom mysteries, Or have that faith which mountains can remove, Or feed, or die, for whom our natures love; All this will prove of nought—'tis all in vain, Unless our souls from heaven are born again! Born of the Spirit's regenerating grace, Wash'd thereby; as are all Israel's race! THESE SIGNS, THESE WONDERS, and this mighty power,

Of the Eternal Spirit, whom we adore, But shew, in visible creation, that control, It has, and holds, o'er every quicken'd soul! New heads, new hearts, new feet, and hands, and tongues

It gives to Israel,—all the ransom'd ones! It RESTS upon them all life's journey through, Their thoughts with heaven, and holiness imbue; Reveals more deep their native impotence, And Christ, the Rock of ages and our sure defence! Enchants their souls with glories of his throne, 'Till they incessant cry—come! O Jesu! come! Thus makes as high the souls of God's elect Above the world, as what apostles' act Is high above the maniac's frantic deeds, Or who fights his shadow, or for his honor bleeds, This Spirit's presence to all saints proclaims Jesus has risen, and still lives and reigns! Again Peter speaks the awful mystery, In Jehovah's counsel, and his firm decree; That Jews, with impious hearts, and wicked hands, Must kill the Christ fulfilling heaven's commands! That God had raised him that he should dispense, To Jew and Gentile saving penitence. That thus exalted, HE had shed abroad, The Holy Ghost—and lived both Christ and Lord! BOTH LORD AND CHRIST! the LORD of power unknown.

To RULE the wicked, and to SAVE HIS OWN!
THE CHRIST! the anointed Prophet, Priest and King,
Thus given of God to the elect in him.
Made of Jehovah to all the heirs of grace
REDEMPTION, WISDOM, their great RIGHTEOUSNESS
And SANCTIFIER!—HIM, his saints adore,
Ye men or devils, what want his people more?
Such truth the Lord commands we preach to all,
That from the MASS he may his people call!*

^{*} It is an almost universal impression among men, that God designed the gospel as an instrument for moralizing the world! And what is called the gospel ministry is shaped accordingly! So that there is infinitely more solicitude manifested to moralize the world, than to save the church! It is, however, to be proved, yet, that God ever designed his gospel for any thing more than to save, instrumentally, his church and people! He has got other means of managing the wicked nature of the world, and he as effectually controls that among the heathen as in christendom: God always has, and will continue, in his providence, to place man in such a situation, and before him such objects of temporal pursuit as will suitably

To them he'll give repentance and true faith, E'en to those ordain'd to life through his own death. Such was the SERMON first promulged to men, By an apostle, in Immanuel's name! What an apostle preach'd must be safe rule, For all who would learn, or teach, in Zion's school! That sermon, hateful as it may appear, Or grating to each uncircumcised ear; Was made the power of the Holy Ghost, To give repentance to a numerous host. With uplifted hands—tears streaming from each eye, Three thousand sinners simultaneous cry; "O, awful depths of sin to which we have fell; What shall we do to save our souls from hell?" The apostle answered—Sinners! vain you ask, What you shall do! Salvation is a task, Which only God performs; to you we are sent To say, that God COMMANDS men to repent. The commandment of the Lord still standeth sure, If men repent, Jehovah is the doer! He speaks!—'tis done—commands, it standeth fast; Of our salvation he's the first and last! Christ is exalted Zion's glorious Prince, To GIVE to his people saving penitence. Repentance is of grace, and so is faith, Both GIFTS secured by our Immanuel's death, Thus testify the saints, and thus the scripture saith. As now, hereafter, multitudes will rise, As Israel's teachers, mantled in disguise, Profess to make the gospel to all men plain, And thus, illusive, to the world proclaim. O Earth, Earth, Earth, you have most ample POWER. You want but the WILL for to become the doer Of all the law and gospel too demands, And thus fulfil all the divine commands.

influence him to put himself under so much restraint as will secure the existence of society, until God has done his purpose with that society on earth! "He makes the wickedness of the wicked to praise him, and the residue of their wrath He restrains."—Then let the gospel be preached to the end designed, and not attempt to shape it into another use! Dont fear the wicked, but fear God, and do his commandments!!

† God commands men every where, (not all men,) i. e. among Gentiles as well as Jews!—God commands in sovereign grace!—it must be done!

We have found at last, what mortal never knew,
The law says, "do and live," and thus the gospel too!"
We've found it out! let not our wisdom die!
(Ye disguised ARMINIANS, frown on all reply!)
We have found it out! and thus in love proclaim,
REPENTANCE AND FAITH, AND MORAL LAW'S THE SAME!

(Who will denv us now a D. D.'s name!) This being so, then only love the Lord, Eternal life shall be your great reward! O you have POWER to quicken your dead souls! Get but the WILL and then your power controls All sin, all hell, all earth, death and the grave, And proves your arm omnipotent to save! Ne'er doubt, though Christ asserts, it is a God That works repentance, and does faith afford: Though apostles say, Almighty power doth save, E'en that rais'd a Saviour from the grave! Though Paul himself declares he has the WILL, But not the power, one precept to fulfil! Though all before us who have Jesus own'd, For want of power have sigh'd and wept and groan'd; Though every step of the dread path they trod, Was watered with scalding tears, and sweat and blood; While each exclaim'd, alas! no power have I To think one righteous thought: I'm vanity, Of vanities; my volition and my power, ^{*} Fuller, in his gospel, labors to convince the Baptist church that he is a Calvinist sentimentally; and conceiving that he is secure of this opinion, he throws all his subtlety of effort into an attempt to lead the Baptist church into the practical foolery of a methodist camp-meeting. This is what the Devil was at when he put forth Fuller's gospel! He found he could not make the Baptist church sentimentally Arminian, to the end that they might become practically so! and therefore, he determined to exercise his master stroke of manœuvre to make them practical Arminians, to the end that they might, ostensibly, tolerate and sanction, for a season, by their doings, all the deleria impulses of Arminianism; and become, finalby, so charmed and enchanted with the parade, eclat and honor, HE would secure their practical Arminianism, that they would become (like Samson in the lap of Delila) so enfeebled with adulation, that they would yield at last to the sentiment as well as practice!!-This is an epitome of the Devil's design with Fuller's gospel that has, already, tingling demonstration! The Columbian College and Columbian Star are the centre point of that demonstration!

Are both abortions every fleeting hour!*
Though it be said by HIM who's ever true,
'Tis God works in his saints to will and po;
That by his power they are kept through faith,
And in that power stand faithful unto death.
Be not ye mov'd from Fuller's‡ gospel, wise,

* That the atonement of Christ derives its value from the mere dignity of the person of Christ: that God the Father made that atonement general, and the Holy Ghost makes it special: that Jesus Christ was in a state of trial and probation here on earth: that Jesus Christ weeps in heaven because sinners wont believe and be saved: that the very bosom of God is stabled by sinners in their rejection of the gospel: that believers are not to love Christ for what he is to them, but for what he is in himself, and must love him as much if he sends them to hell as if he raise them to glory: that every man will be judged and rewarded according to his works, and therefore John Wesley will have one of the highest, or the very highest seat in glory---higher than the apostle Paul, or any other apostle, for he did more works than either Paul or any one of the apostles: that it is the moral duty of all men to believe, who have the gospel, and the moral duty of those who have it to send it to those who have it not; and that to neglect these moral duties is to be subjected to condemnation: that every sinner may, at any moment, now or hereafter, choose and decide whether he will be saved or not: that the condition or term upon which pardon of sin is granted, is the confession of sin: that all the improvements in the arts and sciences, political and domestic economy, are all but so much preparation for the Lord, when he comes to reign on earth: that he will give it all to his saints, particularly those who have been Baptists; and that their shares in the general stock will be in proportion to what they now do for the Lord, in building colleges, the-The foregoing is a small specimen of the ological schools, &c. doctrine preached by the Fullerites: all of which the author has heard them advance himself, and will hereafter give their worthy Well may the Fullerites vaunt and say----Andrew's gospel is unanswerable! If what they preach be his gospel, the Devil would blush at the blasphemy it exhibits---even Satan would find it intangible!

† This sentiment is preached by a man calling himself a Regular Baptist Minister! Is this not a slander upon the Regular Baptist Society of sufficient magnitude to entitle that individual to the penitentiary? But he threw it out as a bait for the Methodists, and it is worthy of the prostituted intellect and selfish doings of the creature that uttered it. To him we say....Thou lineal descendant of Elymas, mark! there is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue! You appear to have done your dirty work, your reward is at hand! An insulted, slandered society shall ere long mete it to you----or you must fly!

± As a regular, old-fashioned Baptist in theology, the author feels and expresses an ineifable contempt for Mr. Fuller's gospel! and

'Tis no bald, disjointed chat, or cloth'd with lies!
Still, still believe, that God made man more wise
Than angels—who ne'er could scan the mysteries
Of Grace's reign! believe ye, furthermore,
That God made man with Almighty power!
A power from corruption holiness to form!
And if he wills, a Devil to transform!
Believe not only, man was made to love
With creature power, the God of heaven above,
But that man also, if in case he fell,
Was bound to save himself from sin and hell;
That if he be saved not by his own powerful hand,
Then his damnation is because he's damn'd!*

selemnly, after repeated perusal of that gospel, he does not think that ever Fuller knew, in his own soul, what the repentance and faith of God's elect are! Fuller did well as a writer against Arianism---it was Greek against Greek! (argumentum ad hominem!) in which case he might prove the better Greek without being a Christian! Stephen's answer to Andrew's gospel shows the latter committing himself to so many and such palpable contradictions as would disgrace a school-boy: vet his numerous brainless or graceless admirers proclaim the book unanswerable! Now be it known that the Devil has 99 Arminians and Fullerites to patronize Fuller's gospel, or any other heretical book, where there is one child of grace to patronize an answer! This will account for Andrew's gospel not having been exposed as an imbecile heterodox production by many!

* If the gospel be simply the blessed instrument, in the hand of the Holy Ghost, of saving the church from sin and preparing her for heaven: then to hold it up as a code of law for the world is a lie! And yet how much of this slang is found in the ministry of even professed Calvinists. For instance, they say to the world-What gospel light you have resisted! What grace you have abused! What privileges you have neglected! Now the fact is, the world has not one ray of gospel light, not one grain of grace, and not one privilege in the gospel—not one tittle of interest there! Then again the world is threatened with damnation for resisting that gospel light-for abusing that grace-for neglecting those terms, &c .---Men, women and children are terrified with the apprehension that the gospel will be the sole cause of their condemnation, or doubly damn them unless they comply with certain terms and conditions which it holds forth to all: To have read or heard read, to have even touched or seen the gospel, appears to involve them in this slouble damnation, and they become terrified into a profession-like unto Ephraim's food! i. e. the east wind!

Why this blasphemous representation of the precious gospel?—Why this mighty solicitude to terrify sinners with a prospect of damnation from the gospel as well as from the law? Why this per-

Believe ye this—nor will ye want for proof,
That Fuller's Gospel is the matchless truth:
Ten thousand covert pharises will own,
That Fuller's Gospel is the worthy one:
Ten thousand geniuses, of order bright,
Shall bless the day that usher'd it to light;
The day that gave it to their subtle hand,
The alchymist, magi, and their Father's wand!*

verting the right ways of the Lord? Why this unblushing and gross inconsistency among professed Calvinistic ministers? Is it ignorance, or is it to make good the quid pro quo!

Jehovah has proclaimed his gospel to be his instrument of "saving them that believe, even as many as are ordained unto eternal life, or that the Lord our God shall call!" Why not then hold it up with unwavering purpose of heart, and in uniform testimony, as that instrument, and nothing more or less! This only can give the sinner legitimate ground of confidence in and hope from it. If this view thereof does not attract his attention and interest his feelings, no other will! Other representation of the precious gospel is false, and must end in delusion!

* By this potent dogma of Fuller, namely—that it is the "moral" duty of all men who have, or who can have, the Bible, to believe savingly in Christ:" and, consequently, the moral duty of all who have the Bible to put it into the hands of those who have it not, or be subject to the "most awful of God's punishments," by the power of this dogma, we say, the Fullerite Baptists in America have established missions in the genuine spirit of Arminianism, built 60,000 dollar meeting houses—a college, theological seminary, obtained extensive patronage for their Baxterian, or, otherwise, nondescript theological publications (Latter Day Luminary, and Columbian Star!) run into debt to the amount of 200,000 dollars, (and which they will pay exactly when Great Britain pays her national debt!) to the defrauding of widow and orphan, and ruin of friends and brethren! + By the power of this dogma the most of the Baptist churches cease to have any charity for themselves, for their children, for their families, relatives, friends and neighbors, (O what zeal for the Lord!) they cease to maintain an evangelical ministry among themselves: they cease to consider it their duty to bestow a farthing upon an evangelical minister that God in his providence may send or permit to go among them—they cease to care whether one doctrine or another is introduced among their churches! By this dogma, delusion has been carried so far that shoals of professors in the Baptist society have conceived it their moral duty to preach, even though they stuttered equal to Demosthenes when his mouth was filled with gravel stones. By the power of this dogma, shoals of professed Baptists have conceived that any little, petty thing they might do, or had done, to put the Bible into the hands of others, raised them at once, in "the eye of the world," as Howards! made them very Solomons, and superseded the necessity (Dead, dead the soul, what POWER can it have;

Or,—will—the bones, now crumbling in the grave!)
The doctrine has the voice of Tophet's Sire:
'Tis a blasting effort to make God a liar!
To hurry professors into all extremes
In doing and device, of the maniac's dreams;
Till the vain form of godliness prevail,
Blanch Zion's cheek, and make her pastors wail
In tears of blood—while foes exult and rail!
Apostles preach'd! and so did Zion's Head,
To man as in a moral grave, and dead;

of their knowing, or being concerned about, the mere truth of the Bible through the medium of an evangelical ministry, which they conceive to be an old-fashioned, obsolere affair in the church, and therefore treat it with due gibe and contempt when compared with their scientific doings. By the power of this dogma, delusion has already been carried so far that young ladies of the first respectability have conceived it their moral duty to marry Indians with the expectation and fond, fond, hope of securing a progeny of chris-TIANS: while other females have been excited to such a degree with the idea that it was their moral duty to preach, that even in the Baptist church alone, several females have become, (by the agitations of their minds upon the subject through the day) somnolent preachers at night: By this dogma, Miss Livermore and Miss Miller (the latter, if not the former, was a baptist) have been goaded into the ministry as a call of God, though God himself in his word peremptorily forbids any petticoat ministry, (see 1. Tim. 2:11) and though it is a solemn fact, that no woman that ever yet pretended to preach, has preached the truth, but, at best, gross arminianism! And further, it must be observed, that when any such female preacher has been made an evangelical believer, she has blushed at the recollection of her own impudence, delusion and lies while professing to be a preacher; and has learned thereafter to keep silent in the Church. By the influence of this dogma, the Regular Baptist Church will have themselves inundated with heretical professors, and ministers, until they lose sight of their faith, order and every thing, but this dogma of Fuller's about moral duty: this will be the case, or they must, ere their arm is palsied, shake the loathsome reptile off them, and leave it to consume in the noisy blaze of its own kindling! The author knows the temporary storm that these observations will raise against him, but very shortly after, if his life is spared, he will hush it to prudential silence, by the exhibition of facts stern as death!

† Among numerous instances, the author knows of one ministering brother who has been cheated out of 5000 dollars, and one private brother who is responsible for them to the amount of 36,000, and he will no doubt be made a bankrupt for it in his old age!—Who, then, can doubt their zeal for the Lord!

‡ Instances of this sort the author has met with again and again.

Until they hear the Omnific voice of God. "Awake-arise, and leave your foul abode!" As in the sermon which we now pursue, Peter exclaims—to Gentile and to Jew; Repentance to your souls we see is given, Arise and be IMMERSED! so wills high heaven! And when baptis'd you shall triumph in A heartfelt pardon of your every sin. You then shall share the richer fruits of faith, See more full the glory of Christ's life and death, So God ordains—thus means connect with end, To his bless'd statutes let his saints attend!* The anxious multitude, with hope surprised, Obedient arose and straightway were baptis'd! Steadfast they continued (nor other gospel sought) In the great doctrine the apostles taught! Daily more num'rous grew the faithful host, And walk'd in the comfort of the Holy Ghost. God's great salvation they united crav'd, On all around them, destined to be sav'd! God heard their prayer and daily he brought in Such as should be saved from the world and sin! Thus preach'd apostles—thus the gospel ran, And was made glorious in renewing man; In every nation, kindred, people, tongue,

* More would be written here upon the subject of baptism, was it not that the Devil is so busy, and so successful, in making baptists at this time, out of Arians, Fullerites, Arminians, and other errorists, that the author is almost ashamed to solicit the attention of the intelligent, observing, and evangelical reader to the subject: and yet he must say, that his own extensive observations upon religious society assure him, that many pious individuals in pædo-baptist churches feel it is their duty to be immersed. Such, in attending to the ordinances, may expect much spiritual enlargement and consolation.

Again we say, as our honest opinion, that the Arian Robinson and Metaphysical Fuller have made at least three baptists where the Holy Ghost has made one christian in the baptist church; and this is said upon a knowledge of the society equal to that of any other individual's in the denomination. This assertion is not the less true because unpalatable: the baptist church wants now stern and candid friends: she has had selfish, knavish flatterers long enough.

† This prayer God answered because it was the product of the Spirit! The Holy Ghost never taught any one to pray for the salvation of all men—that is mere nature!

E'en ALL ordain'd to life and joys to come! As then, so since, the Holy Ghost has sought, And, by the gospel, in the elect has wrought, Repentance unto life, and faith in Christ, As Israel's glorious Prophet, King and Priest! Thus will it work through every age to come: Thus sov'REIGN CALL:—'till the great work be done, Ordain'd of God IMMANUEL'S CROWN TO PROVE, AND SHEW THE TRIUMPH OF JEHOVAH'S LOVE!! The universe shall then the work survey, In the full splendors of immortal day; Through angel thrones the mighty shout shall run, Behold! the marriage of the Lamb is come: The bride is ready for her glorious Lord; Prepared the mansions—spread the nuptial board: Ye heavenly hosts, hail this triumphant day, And to the hill of Zion speed your way: Tune, tune your harps, your lyres harmonious string, This day Eternity's great anthem you begin, The ascendent of God's sov'reign acts to sing! Obedient arise the countless hosts on high,* And to the hill of Zion mellifluent fly: The King of Kings, the Lord of Lords there stood, Rob'd in a vesture crimson'd with his blood! Enraptured heaven with holy tumult gaze! Prostrate they worship, then rising shout his praise! While thus adoring, o'er their vision came A rolling world of uncreated flame, Whose dazzling rays converge on Zion's King; While thus Jehovah's voice spake from within! Thou brightness of my glory, darling Son! The hour of thy espousals and thy glory 's come! Behold the Bride adorn'd for thine embrace, (The wife I gave thee in covenant and in grace!)† She comes in lustre glorious as thy own, t

Rom. viii, 17. See also that remarkable passage in Jer. xxxiii, 36, ending with—"ooze asher ikira Le Ieva Zedkenoo!" Here.

^{*} There may not be a correct keeping of time here, even in poetic licence: if so, let it pass for what it is worth in the estimation of the critic.

[†] The salvation of the church from hell is justice to Christ, for his blood and righteousness! Her preparation for heaven is grace to him for her—it is the emanation of Jehovah's charity! Therefore to talk about sun beams, dew drops, bread and water being bought by the blood of Christ is the height of absurdity!

To share with thee the honors of thy throne. Ye angels ministrant the chaste bride bring in: Ye heavens prepare the hymeneal song to sing! Angels obey with joy and holy pride, And swift as a sunbeam are at Zion's side. Hail! highly favor'd of the Lord! they cry, How levely thou—thy destiny, how high! All heaven is waiting thy fair form to see; Thy Bridegroom's heart is yearning deep for thee. We bear thee to HIM, loveliest of all above, To consummate thy joys and his great love. While thus congratulant, the angels gain, With their lov'd charge, triumphant Zion's plain. Christ sees his Bride, and she her glorious Lord! He shouts, my love!—she cries, O my adored! Resistless, as lightning, are their mutual charms, They rush triumphant to each other's arms, Receive and give an embrace never known: Or since, or while Jehovah has a throne! Well pleas'd Jehovah the lov'd scene surveys, Imparts his glory in a fiercer blaze; All heaven dilates in overwhelming joy, And the event their lab'ring thoughts employ. While thus they muse from glory Jah* descends In glory that all former far transcends. As blazing noon the twilight-angel eyes O'erladen'd, close—prostrate all heaven lies! The superior glory of Jehovah moves, Around the twain whom he so matchless loves: Upon their heads a Father's hand he press'd, Their union crown'd—and thus that union bless'd. Child of my adoption! spouse of my great Son! Well may thou exclaim—WHAT HAS JEHOVAH DONE!

Thou see'st you hell, unfathomably deep, Where devils and men incessant howl and weep: Pangs pierce their souls, frenzy fires their brain; They writhe convulsive in eternal pain. Their NATURE still enmity to Israel's God, And still they feel my fierce avenging rod.

we have it declared that she (the church) "shall be called Jehovah our righteousness."

* Jah is that name in the Hebrew language which signifies the divine nature or essence!

Why thou art not there, and thy bed in hell: Hear me, the Father of thy husband, tell! Before the world began, or heavens were made, My delight was with you in your glorious Head: Or e'er the morning stars together sang, In him I chose you from the race of man! I loved you with an everlasting love, And ordain'd your sin and thraldom to remove. My Son Eternal the same passion* felt, His bowels too o'er thee did yearn and melt: Nor less the Spirit felt the love divine, The Three in One exclaim'd—she shall be mine! My gift, the Father said—my wife, --- said the Son! Nor will I cease till she becomes my own! He read our laws-he saw I must have blood! Exultant he cried—I'll give it, O my God! Betrothe me HER in cov'nant for my wife, I'll give to thee, if thou to her give LIFE! The word went forth—the marriage bond was drawn, The parties, respective, by themselves had sworn: Bone of thy bone, flesh of thy flesh, my Son From that great hour virtually become! What God had join'd together none could part, Nor sin, nor death, nor Satan's subtlest art! Who, what, and where thou wast, I've made thee feel.

In yonder world—there, there, I made thee reel, To and fro by floods of sorrow toss'd, In which thou oft shriek'd—my God—my God, I'm lost!

There thou wast made to feel a hell thy due,
That for thy redemption thou could'st nothing do:
When, lo! I said (well thou rememberest it)
"I have found a ransom—deliver from the pit!"
That ransom was the blood of my lov'd Son,
Whose embrace thou hast—and now shall share his throne!

Was ever object in such a manner sought!
Was ever wife with such a ransom bought!
Thou, too, wast naked, and most hideous foul,
HE flung around thy horror-smitten soul,
The ample robe of his great righteousness

^{*} The author uses this term in its figurative sense.

And bid thee welcome to Jehovah's face! When thus without so beauteously adorn'd, For inward holiness thou secret mourn'd. No language could thy pantings here express, Thou roar'd, give me, "Holy Ones," True Holiness. Holiness had now thy element become! In that thou could st live and move and breathe, alone. When thy breast first upheav'd with that desire, It prov'd the presence of the "Refiner's fire:" That heaving was the converse of all sin, And made thee, Daughter, "all glorious within!" O'er that spark celestial, did corruption roll, Which oft cast down and terrified thy soul; But unextinguished did the fire remain! Fierce and more fierce upshot the sacred flame! Till with enragement of holiness thou glow'd, And meet for thy destined heavenly abode. It was by my Spirit given through my Son, That in thee, Zion, this great work was done!t Well has he fulfill'd a husband's faithful part, Well may be have, O Daughter, all thy heart. And now thou dost before my throne appear, Blameless and perfect and Jehovah's heir. Let the wife honor and obey her Lord, As erst commanded heaven's unerring word: The husband love, sustain and cherish his chaste wife As his own soul; or while he shall have life! Jehovah's blessings, as a Father's, rest On your espousals--bless'd of all the blest!

* Daniel iv, 17. This unquestionably refers to the triune Gods † The author, in common with all who preach the doctrine of sovereign grace, has been dubbed an Antinomian: but he has the satisfaction of knowing that they who gave him that name were disguised, or open, Arminians. He has disturbed many a covert nest of them in the Baptist society: and it was very natural that when the old serpent's head was hit the young ones should hiss. is, an Antinomian is rara avis in terris, nigroque simillima cygno-(a rare bird in the earth, and very like a black swan.) factor is in direct opposition to the moral predilections of man since the full, which are to save himself by his own works, if not altogether, in part: or, in other words, man is as predisposed to Arminianism, as swine are to mud-wallowing. This the Devil knows, and is too wise to trouble himself with making men Antinomians, when he is sure of them as Arminians. But when Armimianism is assailed, the Devil will be sure to have plenty of his jackalls yelling out, Antinomianism! Antinomianism!

O'er thee the JAH eternally shall sing,* To JAH eternal fruits of glory bring!! The awful majesty of unborn light Retires-and angels once more regain their sight: While in their ears Jehovah's voice proclaims, Ye angels rise! and sing eternal pæans. Uprise the hosts, exultant, and surround The hill of Zion, as heaven's most hallow'd ground: The Son, as a burning furnace, they see glow, And round his Bride an ineffable halo: To them she speaks, as heaven's imperial Queen, And thus directs the Jubilee's first scene! Thrones and dominions, principals and powers, Approach the object whom all heaven adores, And see in him the Husband of my soul, Through whom, o'er us, these whelming glories roll. In him elected you have never fell, In him elected I'm redeem'd from hell: In him elect, you've kept your holiness; I am holy through his sov'reign, sov'reign grace. Unite ye heavens to make his praises known, White his Bride's hand his glorious head shall crown. Behold the splendors of his diadem What countless stones! how living every gem: Purg'd in his blood, and polish'd by his hand, Is every jewel: and shall forever stand, In blazing radiance on his majestic brow, And o'er his Zion light eternal throw. So spake the Bride: and then in holy blush, (While every nerve with sacred joy was flush) She rais'd the crown, and plac'd it on his head, And from her soul's centre, to her Bridegroom said: In thee, O Jesus, I am now complete; "Presented perfect" at Jehovah's feet! I feel thee here to be my all in all: Into thy dear arms I now forever fall; No more to mourn the hidings of thy face, No more to agonize for thine embrace: But on thy bosom eternally to rest; And hail'd forever:—"Bless'd of all the blest." While Zion spoke new glories fill'd the sky: From whence, or what is this? the angels cry.

^{*} Zephaniah iii, 17. The Jehovah, thy God in, &c.

Behold THAT Bow! high tow'ring o'er our thrones! Then rove their eyes to see from whence it comes. The Bride interprets: and thus the source explains: Behold HIS CROWN! 'tis streaming forth its flames, To blood-dy'd Calvary! Behold them run, While from its brow, in awful grandeur's sprung The arch of Messiah's glory: looming high, In this refulgence, through our hallow'd sky; Its termination on the eternal hills: And thus the glory of MY Husband fills. Ye triumphant heavens, obey ye Zion's call, Hail ye my Jesus-Sov'reign Lord of all! O, what a sound! what mighty glories roll! And drown my senses, and upheave my soul! Pause, pause, my muse, attempt not to describe The 'whelming anthem: or of Jesu's bride Sing more, till at his sov'reign feet I fall, And with them hail, adore, and feel him-LORD OF ALL!

FINIS.

NOTE I.

Let not scriptorians complain because there is not reference given to the numerous passages of scripture embraced in this Poem: be it remembered by them, that it is an experiment by a solitary, isolated, individual, to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, in a novel form—even that faith which is the most unpopular subject, at the present day, under the heavens! Let not erudite theologians complain, because there is not more systematic, or comprehensive theology embraced in the work: be it by them remembered, that it is written mainly for a region that can bear but little light; where few know the truth, and where most of those who know any thing about it shrink from the defence, or even the recognition of it, as flesh and blood shrink from the halter or gibbet. The author is aware, that this implies a severe reflection upon the sentiment, or mental integrity of ministers around him, but not more severe, than he knows feelingly to be merited.

NOTE II.

The title page calls for "a Retrospective and Prospective view of the Baptist Society," as an appendage to this poem; but it is, upon further reflection, deemed advisable to extend that view beyond what could have been well prepared for this volume without detaining the press, or interfering with the preaching tours of the au-It is therefore now concluded to publish the said view in a volume by itself. That view will comprise about 150 pages octavo; in which will be exhibited irrefragable evidence, that all the heresies among the Baptists on the eastern side of the mountains, and all the heresies on the western side, together with all their college, publishing, theological school, and missionary enterprize, originated from thewritings of the Arian Robinson, and metaphysical Andrew That while Fullerism has been playing off its anticks on the eastern side of the mountains, under the appropriate and particular agency of Dr. Staughton, Luther Rice, O. B. Brown, and some few others; that Robinson's arianism has been equally busy, in its experiments on the western side of the mountains, under the agency of the two Campbells, one Dr. (so dubb'd by the Arian Holly president of the Transylvania college in Kentucky,) Fishback and others, and all at the expense of the character of the Regular Baptist It will be also shewn, that the union of Robinson's arianism, and Fuller's metaphysical gospel, has produced a brood of heresies in the name of the Baptist church, only surpassed in number by the progeny of Milton's allegorical personages of sin and death, and only equalled in hue, by the colours of the Kaliedeit will be further shewn, that Fuiler's Worthy Gospel has been and is indebted to all the open and disguised Arminians in all the professing societies in Great Britain and America, for its celebrity: that it has posed all their brains to know what it means, but that they have inferred it was designed as a blow against the ugly monster, Calvinism, and from that consideration, together with the vanity of appearing to comprehend incomprehensibles, they have hailed it as the Athenians of old did their unknown God: and that, with thousands more, the vox populi, in reference to Andrew's gospel has been, as first it was, considered as the vox Dei. further shewn, that upon Robinson's system of theology (of which Alexander Campbell, in his "Christian Baptist" is a mere copyist) every man, woman and child in christendom, who have simply heard or read, that "Jesus is the Christ" may become Baptists: and that Fuller's gospel makes it their moral duty, to become so, and that it WARRANTS every means, honest or dishonest, to make men believe: a full practical illustration of which, will be furnished from the history of the Church, College and Seminary buildings, together with the varied carnal expedient, guile and knavery, that have been resorted to, to gather the moral sensibilities of the country together in support of their enterprises in the Baptist society: all of which the writer will, if life be spared him, make self evident to every truly spiritual man that may investigate the subject. The far famed Principals of these and other kindred projects will then have, in addition to the vast posthumous celebrity they have been so intensely struggling for, an appropriate reminiscence furnished to their minds, of the "ways and means" by which they have secured such distinction, and involved to probable beggary numerous respectable individuals and families, gulled the community out of $300,000, and the labourer of his hire, to the amount of $100,000, and that the whole is a visible, tangible, and most ample experimental demonstration of the profound sapiency and unparalleled zeal of the ugents under whose memorable auspices this luminous practical demonstration has been given, that Andrew "Fuller's Gospel is worthy of all acceptation."

The design of the VIEW will be, to contribute a mite towards facilitating a separation between the essential Regular Baptist church, and these detestable, and now huge Arian and Fullerite excrescences.* That separation must take place at some and no distant period: the sooner the better. To have been instrumental in bringing it about, will be a grateful evidence to the author, that he has not lived for nought or in vain.

NOTE III.

We have said in Note 2nd, that all the freaks and experiments of Fullerism, have been at the expense of the character of "the

^{*} There will be a loud and a long exclamation on the part of the Fullerites of "divided we fall," and it will be true so far as it respects themselves: they will fall to their proper level; they will dwindle into insignificancy, or merge into the Arminian ranks, to which, in all their moral feelings, they properly belong, and from which Andrew Fuller's gospel has merely detained them, as the ignus fatuus diverts, for a moment, a swarm of insects from their NATIVE QUAGMIRE.

Regular Baptist Church"-as an instance, the author is surrounded with a "conie folk" calling themselves Regular Baptists; they have the Philadelphia Confession of Fuith in their hands, as their safeguard, while from their pulpit, they receive the grossest heresies that ever was uttered by a man calling himself a Baptist minister. They profess to be governed by the Baptist Confession of Faith, and yet exclude their female members from a vote in church affairs, and admit persons into their societies, who will tell them that they must be Methodists too, i.e. go to Methodist meeting when they please—while their ministers themselves attend Methodist class meetings, love feasts, &c. and profess great fellowship with them: No wonder that bank-stock, rail-road stock, &c. is offered (when the Lord shall come!) in double portion, to every Methodist, Presbyterian, or any one, who will but confess their sins to Mr. B. and become Baptists. And yet these creatures will lustily vociferate, that they are regular Baptists, and shew the Baptist Confession of Faith, as an evidence thereof: indeed, they go so far as even to use that Confession of Faith, when they want to silence a member who may be conscientiously constrained to denounce their brainless and heretical ministry, and which they call "false accusation;" and by the Confession of Faith, they would then exclude him, tho' at the same time, they call the doctrine of that Confession of faith, "hodge podge stuff."—They are subject to endless schism and uproar, and when in an extremity, they send to some distant place, an hypocritical lament, about their sufferings for the sake of the "Baptist faith;" enlist the sympathies of some faithful minister, ignorant of them. cajole him to come among them at the sacrifice of hundreds of dollars, promise to bear his travelling expenses, at least, and then cheat him out of the whole, and attempt to make him submit to their lawless creed and order, by threatening their united voice against him (a stranger!) if he submit not to their maniac-like dicta-This case is not imaginary, but real-not solitary, but one of a thousand instances of the crocodileism of the Fullerites.

NOTE IV.

It has been reported that the writer was engaged in writing against Fuller's gospel—now, when the writer began the foregoing poem, he had not Fuller in his thoughts; any notice therefore, of Fuller's writings, is contingent and incidental. When the contemplated "view" comes out, then Fullerism will be seen in bold relief, both as respects its plan of operation, and practical doings: Afterwards, perhaps, the author may shew Andrew's self contradiction to be equal to his theological heresy, and that both together, rendered him worthy of being placed among the number of Arminian idols, and labelled with a D. D. All this however, depends upon the number of days that may be added to the existence of the writer. If he lives not to do it, he will die, having it in his heart to perform that much more service for the Regular Baptist Church!

The author has added a few miscellaneous pieces, to meet the expectations, and gratify the feelings of some few private christian friends: Their estimation thereof, leads him to believe, that they will not prove altogether unprofitable to others. The pieces are from a volume designed, in the end, to be called the "Lights and shades of Christian and Ministerial life"—of which, the following scraps are somewhat expressive.

COMMUNION.

O how precious 'tis to meet, Kindred spirits in the Lord; And with them take counsel sweet In the peace his paths afford.

To them is his promise given,
That where two or three convene,
Jesus will descend from heaven,
And reveal himself to them.

O the matchless mercy shown
In the riches of his grace,
Jesus may be found at home
Found in every sphere and place.

Christ! be with my longing soul:
O I'm sick for sight of thee!
Breathe upon me, make me whole,
Let me feel thy firm decree.

Yes, thy firm decree it is, That thy chosen should attain, All the holiness and bliss That an angel's eye e'er seen.

Other hope, O Christ I've none,
For redeeming power and grace;
The plan, the work, is all thy own
And thine for ever be the praise.

O how little do I feel,
While the words so freely flow;
My heart is oft as hard as steel
And sideling as the treach'rous bow.

Now Jehovah, Jesus come,

Down with every rival form;

Let me serve thee, God! alone,

For thee, for thee, still I burn.

O the balmy, soothing thought,

That the time fast rushes on,

When all that blood divine hath bought.

And I in glory will be one.

Then I'll lay my weary head, On the bosom of my God; On his smiles be ever fed, For ever to his love restored.

MINISTERIAL EMOTION.

What mind can grasp Immanuel's boundless love To those for whom a servant he became In mortal's fearful form? For whom he drank The bitter cup of God's severest wrath: From wave to wave of heaviest sorrow toss'd; With grief acquainted of unfathom'd depths: Sustain'd in sufferings 'till omnipotence No further might sustain? Who that partakes Of the Redeemer's mind, but feels a glow Of high, unutterable love to those For whom he suffered and for whom he died! What are all feelings that possess the breast Of man ambitious, or of man supine, Compared with those the messenger of grace Has for the Zion of his God on earth! His soul for her, incessant travail feels: Nor wealth, nor honour, fondest friends nor foes. Can e'er divert his head and heart and all From this bright object of his heaven-born zeal. His eye is fix'd intense on every soul Renew'd by sov'reign grace, as a bless'd part Of that vast edifice ordain'd to rise Above all angel thrones! the highest point Of Deity reveal'd. To lay one "lively stone" On this, Jehovah's last, choice, dwelling place; To him, is higher honour than e'er graced The radiant brow of noblest seraphim!

But O, what language can express the wo Of him, who feels all these immense desires And fond solicitudes for Zion's weal, And yet forbid to share the humblest part Of service for her: cast aside and doom'd, To drag his soul, from day to day, thro' scenes Of earthly labours, and of earthly cares!

WRITTEN UNDER A SCENE OF TEMPTATION.

O Thou! in whom my life is hid,
Who in my soul hope's glory dwells:
Let thy Omnific mandate bid
Destruction to the tempter's spells.

Lord Jesus! bound to thee am I,
Thou art my meat, my drink, my all!
Earth hell and sin, in vain shall try,
To drown my heavenly shepherd's call.

Ye angels, see me 'midst the flames Of trials, fiery, sharp and strong, Tho' unconsumed the bush remains! To Jesus higher raise your song.

And ye, who thro' the awful gloom,
And tempests of this wo-worn world,
Have gain'd an high celestial noon,
With glory's banners all unfurl'd:

Look ye on one, who trembling treads,
The rugged path your feet once trod:
Whose arms of faith and prayer outspread,
Are reaching for your heaven—your God.

Soon another gem will blaze
In the crown of your high Priest:
My soul redeem'd by sov'reign grace
Will make more rich your heavenly feast.

PARAPHRASE ON JEREMIAH XVII. 5.

What! trust in man! extreme of all that's mad: A Parthian spear were harmless to his heart.

Repose on human kind! O fool of fools! A nest of scorpions were a safer pillow. Yes, I would rather trust to serpent fangs For nurturing juice, than human breast for kindness; Or place myself beneath the tiger's paw, Than in man's hand, for generous protection. Take all that's hateful, loathsome and abhorr'd In reptile form, or prowling beasts of prey, Combine it all—all, all 's but a faint type Of man's vile turpitude: a sea unfathom'd, Unmeasurable, known, to none but God! Nor has the page of human life been scann'd, If this be fancied or affirm'd untrue. O, who would dwell forever with this herd Of ruthless monsters, in the form of man! My soul is sick and gasping in her toils, To shun the blasting embrace of the wretch, And struggle from the meshes of his snares: But all my toil is vain: hell triumphs in him, And brings me prostrate to his ravenous maw. E'en now his iron teeth are fasten'd on me, He bites and will devour, 'till all is gulp'd That years of labour bid me call my own.

PARAPHRASE ON ISAIAH Xliv. 23.

God hath sav'd us! shout ye angels!
Sav'd us e'er the world began!
His own spirit hath proclaim'd it,
To the fallen race of man.

By the precious life and dying,
Of his perfect, spotless Lamb;
Sinners have, and may draw nigh him;
Yea, HE calls them by their name.

Calls them with an holy calling,
Saves them from their every sin;
Keeps their feet from ever falling,
Binds their wand'ring hearts to him.

O the mighty depths and riches, Of Jehovah's truth and grace: This an angel's thought outstretches,
Theme of heaven's eternal praise.
Shout O heavens! God hath done it!
Nothing's wanting—all's complete:
Jacob's seed shall ever sing it,
Seraphs shall the song repeat.

INVOCATION TO THE SPIRIT.

A little longer lend a cheering ray Spirit of God! a few steps further on Direct my tottering feet:--soon, soon I'll sink Into the peaceful slumbers of the grave, No more to vex thee, and no more to wound The name of Jesus in a recreant life. There, there I'll rest, exempt from all the storms, That now beat on me and alarm my soul, 'Till the great day, when Gabriel's awful trump, Shall usher in the Sabbath of our God, "Midst wreck of matter and the crush of worlds." Then this corruption shall put on a form All pure, and lovely as Immanuel's own! But oh! what conflicts, and what woes are mine In struggling forth from hell and earth and sin! I agonize to pass the narrow gate That leads to life eternal; while every throe Of my convulsed soul, appears to threaten The dissolution of this mortal frame. And yet I live! Omnipotence sustains! And oft rejoice! The Godhead gives the joy! Jehovah's arm withdrawn, and deep I sink In death, the death that never, never dies. Remove his comforts, and my life 's at best An embryo hell, in all its horrid shapes. But I shall triumph, for Jesus ever lives To carry on the work his grace began, And shew his glory in the weakest saint!

IT WILL NOT TARRY, &c. Hab. ii. 3.

Art thou coming to me—art thou coming to me
O Jesus! the penitent cries;

Art thou coming, deliverer, art thou coming to free My soul from the death that ne'er dies?

An horror of darkness rests on my soul, A mountain of guilt sinks me down;

Hell moves to receive me—its billows fierce roll! But more dread rolls the cloud of thy frown.

Pangs, pangs, seize my soul-frenzy fires my brain, I writhe on the brink of despair;

Is there no eye to pity-no arm to redeem, No ear for my groans and my praver?

O yes! thou art coming-I see thee! my God! From Bosrah! all streaming in blood!

The wine press of wrath. alone, thou hast trod: For me wast thou 'mersed in hell's flood.

Shout! shout! O ye heavens! rejoice O ye Earth! Burst forth in new anthems of praise: Immanuel redeems—gives a spiritual birth, And GLORIFIES sovereign grace.

Art thou coming to me-art thou coming to me? O Jesus! the child of grace cries: In heaven or earth, there is none besides thee,

Can cheer these oft tear dimmed eyes.

Thou hast given my soul a glimpse of thy charms; Thou hast ravish'd my heart with thy smiles: Thy absence creates, in my breast, fierce alarms, Thy presence my sorrow beguiles.

O Jesus! remember thine own awful cry, And the billows that o'er thee did roll; When Eloi, Eloi, lama Sabacthani, Burst forth from thy agoniz'd soul.

Oh! think, thou bless'd angel of presence divine, Of thyself, and then think thou of me, Hell's pains thou hast felt—a measure is mine,

When absent, O Matchless! from thee.

Art thou coming for me--art thou coming for me O Jesus! the dying saint cries:

Art thou coming to bear my wrapt spirit to thee, To mansions prepared in the skies?

The dew damps of Death on my forehead now glisten, His rattle is sprung in my ear:

For thy coming, O Jesus, I long, and I listen: Hark! 'tis he—'tis his voice that I hear.

O music mellifluous—O vision Divine!
O Glory! ineffably bright:

That object—that music—that glory is mine! Thrice welcome, O death, for the sight.

See, see! he descends! streams of glory outbursting From his head and his feet, from his hands and his side:

They rush through my soul (for holiness thirsting)
These speak, in mute eloquence, Jesus has died!

Come nearer. O Jesus! let me gaze on thy charms, Let me feast on the smiles of thy face;

Be thy bosom my pillow--let me rest in thy arms In the last, and e'erlasting embrace.

O! it is done! it is finish'd—I'm free from the clay,
I'm mounting, I'm flying above:
Hail wondrous vision—ineffable day!
I'm lost---lost for ever, in LOVE.

The foregoing lines were suggested by reading of a Venetian song---beginning with "Venite per me"*---and which words were the exclamation of a female maniac, in reference to one, who had been her betrothed lover, but whom death tore from her embrace.

MINISTERIAL SOLILOQUY AND PRAYER.

Shall this tongue again e'er tell
Of Jehovah's sov'reign grace!
Can this darkness, gloom of hell,
To the GOSPEL'S LIGHT give place?

Father! suffer me to prove, My Allegiance to thy Son; Let me panting, burning love, Jesus and his cross to own.

Clothe my mind with heavenly light:
Fill my heart with holy fire:
Rouse me to the noblest fight,
Never, never let me tire,

[&]quot; "Art thou coming for me."

'Till I have gathered unto thee
All thy sov'reign grace ordain'd,
Should thro' my feeble ministry,
Receive thy faith, and that faith's end.

O does heaven or earth afford,
Greater wonder than, that I.
Who thy Jesus once abhorr'd,
Now for him, should live, should die!

Yes, for him, I die to all,
That the world calls great and good;
Die to self, and at his call,
Plunge in sorrow's heaviest flood.

But, O God! do thou not fail,
To impart thy gracious smile;
While the waves of wo prevail;
While at the gospel net I toil.

Oh I remember thou hast sworn,
By thyself and by thy word;
That bless'd are they, who for thee mourn:
Christ shall be their strength, their Lord.

On my pillow-thoughts this night Let thy glorious image press; Ravish'd with the pure delight That my labours thou wilt bless.

"WHY WEEPEST THOU?"

Yes, I would drop a tear at thy bless'd feet Immanuel Jesus—where the streaming eyes Of Magdalene, once penitently flow'd. That tear is shed! and angels bear it hence To learn its import in the sight of God! They know the sorrow of the world works death. And that there 's sorrow unto life eternal! Hence, every tear that flows from mortal eyes Becomes the burden of an angel's wing; 'Till borne on high before the judgment seat, Omniscience reads its source in frowns or smiles; While mute or mellifluent, the celestial hosts Proclaim the dread results!—then come my soul And deep inquire the import of those tears

That often flow in sympathy for thee; Frighted with condemnation or with life!

THE DEPRAYITY OF HUMAN NATURE.

Words may express the sinfulness of sin As man conceives it—not as the saint feels! The mouth of the Eternal ne'er has spoke The deep and awful ruins of our fall, No more than his own holiness described! Who knows not this, knows nothing as he ought Of the Supreme's bestowments thro' his Son, Of sov'reign mercy, and redeeming grace! Hence cries my soul—O God! if ere I reach, The holy habitations of thy throne, 'Twill be to tell of doings for my soul More vast, more mighty, than when worlds on worlds Were raised and moulded by Omnific power, Or angels sprung exultant into lif., Before thy throne, to quaffimmortal joys. Is here thy glory seen? then that is truth! A bench of Bishops could not shew it more.

THE SAME SUBJECT.

And can it be that in this heart, O God! Thy Spirit ever dwelt? that in thy love It bath'd in bliss extatic! while every throb Was spent in murmuring sighs for thee In the full vision of immortal day! This heart so pregnant now with earth-born cares, And cleaving fast to vanity and dust: All insolent, in terms of bitterest charge on thec Because my gourd is fading, and my hopes Of temp'ral joy are scattered by thy frown: A frown more blessed, perhaps, than brightest ray That ever floated o'er angelic eyes From thine eternal throne! O wondrous change! How can such awful, trembling, sad extremes, Be found in mortal soul! The fearful scene Appals, confounds, and sinks me into gloom,

Approaching to despair, and fiend like rage:
I long to say "My Mother!" to the grave,
And be familiar with the clay cold worms;
To have them batten on this trembling flesh
And moisten'd at the fountain of my heart.
And yet, O God! all deep'ning comes the groan
That thy bless'd will, not my vain wish be done.
Oh, that 's the talisman, that charms each grief,
And gives each cloud of sorrow, rain-bow hues!
Bereft of this prevailing, growing, prayer
("Thy will be done,") and I am Satan's mate,
Legion my name, and hell my dire abode!

THE SAME SUBJECT.

Ye humbling, loathsome, torturing train
Of self-abasing views—why hunt me thus
Thro' labours of the day, and dreams of night!
Hast thou no bounds? is there no point, at which
These less'ning estimations of myself will stop!
My head once teem'd with varied projects vast
To ravish earthly fame, and raise proud self,
A Saul in Israel's camp! How are the mighty fallent
Behold me now, disposed to name myself
The chief of fools—the vilest, beastliest wretch,
That ever crawl'd to David's cleansing fount:
And wherefore this! That I may sink to naught!
And Jesus be exalted—"all in all!"
Thus God ordains! my soul cry out—Amen,
While mere professors read, jibe, and are damn'd!

OMNISCIENCE.

Night is as day with thee, omniscient One!
Down to deepest recess of man's heart
Thine eye, all piercing, every moment strikes,
And every fleeting, shadowy, thought surveys,
With all that lifts to joy or sinks to wo.
Exulting thought, to those who Jesus have
"The hope of glory" in their blood bought souls!
There, there, thine eye delighted ever dwells,

While there thine image brightens and expands Into the full expression of thy grace In temples holy, lasting as thy throne!

REDEMPTION.

Deep is our guilt! what mind conceives a cure? Deep is our wo! what arm can yield relief? Deep are our groans! where is the listening ear, Or where a Saviour that will bear our grief? No sooner ask'd than, radiant, forth he comes From David's throne—Immanuel! The Most High! In clouds of glory:—streaming mercy runs Before his chariot-hell and sin must fly! HE speaks! in lofty, deep unequall'd words, And says-O Jacob, thou thyself hast slain! In ME 's thy help, in ME, the Lord of Lords! I'll bring thee, wanderer, to my fold again. My arm's not shorten'd that it cannot save, My ear 's not heavy, that it cannot hear; In my own blood, thy sin-stain'd soul I'll lave, And to my glory, thou shalt rise an heir!

44 I HAVE MEAT THAT YE KNOW NOT OF. ??

Was it Jesus, then, thy meat Thy great Father's will to do? Glorious labour! O how sweet! Saviour let me do it too!

Thou. Immanuel, oft hast said,
That thy strength should perfect prove;
To heal the stck, to raise the dead,
And turn the heart of stone to love.

Glorious Saviour! deign to dwell,
In this troubled soul of mine;
Thy absence makes the gloom of hell,
Thy presence yields me joys divine.

O when thou art nigh I run, In the ways of righteousness, Then Jehovah's will is done,
Then I feel Jehovah's peace!
By thy doings and thy death,
By thy oath and promises,
Make my living, dying breath,
Shout thy sov'reign, sov'reign grace!

SANCTIFY THEM THRO' THY TRUTH, THY WORD IS TRUTH.

Ye pure, translucent, soul refreshing streams, Of light, life, joy and heaven enduring peace; That glow and flash in more than orient beams, O'er every page of God's redeeming grace! How pants my soul to drink your pleasures in, And bathe, incessant, in your holy waves; Till wash'd and cleans'd from all remaining sin. I prove your power, the vilest sinner saves!

IBID.

Oh, what floods of heavenly light,
Does the word of God contain;
Darkness felt is put to flight,
And sin and superstition's reign.
Oft I leave thee, precious book,
For some mortal's feeble lamp:
Or days roll on and I ne'er look
For thy truth of holiest stamp.
But on bended knees I come,
And retrace thy sacred lines;
The only light, the lamp alone
That can shew the end of crimes.

REV. xiv. 1 to S.

Behold, behold, yon beauteous throng,
Hymning round Jehovah's throne;
"By grace we're saved"—is all their song,
Glory to our God alone!

We are now on high enthroned,
Who once were burning brands of hell!
Jesus for our sins atoned,
On him all our sins have fell.

Nothing like our Christ is seen,
On earth below, or in heaven above;
All our souls are fill'd with him;
Ocean of eternal love.

The Jehovah, with delight,
Views us all complete in him:
Exulting angels see the sight
And eager ask from whence we came!

Tribulations we have known,
Thro' them reach'd our high abode:
In sufferings have with Jesus flown
To the haven of our God.

DARKNESS IN PROVIDENTIAL DISPENSATIONS.

This day vouchsafe thy blessing, Israel's God! And guide my feet along the narrow road: Dispense the rays of thy all-cheering smile, And my deep sorrow let thy love beguile. O let me feel, and make me act that part, By which I'll prove the regent of my heart: Display thy power to save from every sin, And make the vilest of all sinners clean. Well known to thee, is all the mountain care That presses on me, sinking to despair; Beneath its weight, I stagger to and fro, I go, I know not where, I know not where to go. Thine eye seems closed, and thy arm withdrawn, Thou leav'st me helpless to the pitiless storm. I cry to thee at noon-day and at night, "My path is darkness, Lord, do thou sow light." The more I cry, the darker grows my path, I groan, I weep, half frantic now I laugh: I kneel, I rise, I read and think and stand, And try a thousand ways again to meet thy hand; But try in vain-I know not what to do. I cry-my God! hast thou forsook me too? Shall I no more behold thy smiling face,

No more find refuge in thy lov'd embrace?

Dear Lord, in mercy, this day change the scene,
Remove the clouds that now do intervene
Betwixt my soul and thee: make my path straight;
Nor let me still my very being hate;
O spread thy glory o'er my waiting eyes,
And urge me onward for my native skies.

" HAS PA COME."

The last words of a dying Infant, in reference to its absent Father.

Yes! thy heavenly Father's come! To his bosom takes thee home: There forever thou shalt rest, In immortal glory drest. Now thine earthly Father's love, Thou canst read from thrones above; There, matured, thy mind can know, All my bitterness of wo. Be thou, spirit of my babe, While the floods of life I wade, The guardian angel of my way, A Beacon to eternal day. Thou art dwelling now in God, Now I press for thine abode; Child of my love, behold I come, Thy Father will be soon at home. There he'll clasp thee in his arms, Free from sin and death's alarms; Welcom'd by thee to thy home, There to glow round glory's throne.

DYING CHRISTIAN'S SOLILOQUY!

Once more, kind friends, support this sinking head To that bless'd pillow, where so oft I've spoke To Jacob's God, in unbreath'd converse high. There, there, I'll gasp my last, nor more entail

^{*} Alexander Pope has written a piece bearing this title: With due estimation of his poetical genius, it must be admitted that his Wearisome nights and days, on mortal friends. Oh! here, this shivering body once more rests, The grave, that rest, e'er long, shall consummate. I feel my soul, in all her varied powers, Gathering her Jesus as her "all in all!" O welcome, and o'erwhelming grand display Of the aboundings of rich sov'reign grace: With life, my all forever might have been lost, And now that all, forever is secured! Yes, yes I feel my fragile bark is off The terrific waves of life's tumultuous sea. The haven is at hand, where floods of wo Shall o'er me roll no more—hurt or alarm This million times toss'd spirit. Ah! what 's that? Some hand of friendly mortal shuts my eyes, . Already seal'd to sublunary things. They see death's dew damps on my forehead glisten, And hear his rattle sounding from my heart: While busy hands are forming now my shroud, And give it fragrance with affection's tears. O Christ! where art thou-robe for my soul Of righteousness eternal! where are thine arms? O let me feel their fond and sure embrace! Now speak-thy voice can sweetest music make Of dying groans:-now come and own The purchase of thy blood-my panting soul! O welcome, welcome this long look'd for hour; This night of death, that consummates the love Of Jesus to my soul. See! the Conqueror comes High on salvation's car! music's spirit breathes From angels, attendant on the Son of man. Bright and more bright, the heavenly scene unfolds! In exstacies absorb'd, my soul surveys The prelude to her everlasting joys, And springs triumphant to Immanuel's arms.

[&]quot;soliloguy" is purely sublimated heathenism---for there is not a word of Jesus Christ, the christian's life, in it. So true it is, that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, or the pen writes: If Christ be not in the heart, that heart will teem with any thing but Christ! But nothing but Christ, makes out christianity.

Should any one be interested, or curious to know who the author of the foregoing volume is, they are referred to Elder Lawrence Greatrake, who is alternately on the eastern and western side of the mountains: he will satisfy all concerned.
